FROM THE EDITOR

If the buff woman on this issue's cover looks familiar (and you don't work out at Boston Athletic Club, where she runs the personal training program and teaches classes), think back to the episode of Fear Factor that ran last February after the Super Bowl. Our cover girl, Alexis Tyson, was the first of six contestants to clamber down a 35-foot ladder hanging from the Monster.com blimp as it hovered over the Pacific Ocean. Her goal: to retrieve a flag placed at its bottom rung. (Unfortunately, she didn't end up with the fastest time, but having competed in itself is still a pretty good story to share at a cocktail party.)

As trainers who obviously practice what they preach, Tyson and colleague Brandon Kolar of the Sports Club/LA make fitting models for the IMPROPER's first-ever health and fitness issue, which we've timed to coincide with those New Year's resolutions we've all made. This month, you may be among the legions of well-intentioned souls heading to the gym with visions of weight loss and newly minted muscle dancing in your head.

If you're one of the hell-bent-for-svelte, though, you may do better to forgo the big plans. According to many of the Boston fitness gurus and nutritionists we interviewed for this issue, it's those visions of grandeur that can squash your resolutions in the long run. It's better to start small.

"Set realistic goals," advises Tyson, who has worked at BAC since 1997 and has a degree in exercise science and fitness management. "People come in and say 'I want to lose 20 pounds in a month.' Instead, make short-term goals to get to your long-term goals. Start out with trying to lose two pounds, then two more." Also, she says, schedule your workouts. "If it's in the planner, you're more likely to do it." Kolar, who has been a trainer for five years and holds a degree in nutrition, agrees. "Incremental goals are key—start out by getting in here once a week instead of trying to go from zero to five," he says. "Find a sense of accomplishment in something."

Whether you haven't set foot in the gym in years or are determined to get in top shape for your first marathon this year, staying committed and positive about your progress will likely be your biggest challenge. For more motivational tips from 10 local trainers and instructors, turn to "You Say You Want a Resolution" on page 26.

Eating more healthfully—you've heard it a hundred times—should go hand-in-hand with your exercise plan, and, here too, reachable goals, as well as an understanding of your habits and emotions, can help ensure that you make healthy changes that stick, say nutritionists. Susan Abbattista's "Fear and Loathing on the Bathroom Scale" (page 23) describes five simple things you can do to improve your diet and control your weight this year.

Varying your workout and keeping it fun can also help you stay motivated, so we sent two staffers out to try some of the latest classes at eight local gyms—from Crunch's Cardio Strip Tease class to Alexis Tyson's own Body Blast class at BAC. Find out how these classes rated for fun and difficulty in Julie Short and Ezra Dyer's "Get Pumped Up" on page 18.

Rounding out this issue are short features on tasteful ways to get a date at the gym, based on interviews with male and female gym-goers on how they like to be approached (page 29) and on the latest workout clothes for men and women (page 31)—even trainers acknowledge that a new outfit can even help you stay motivated or serve as a reward for sticking to it.

Whatever your current fitness level and health goals, we hope you'll find something in this issue to help you stay on the right track. Your challenge is not simply getting to the gym or eating right for a short period of time; it's working every day to produce long-term cumulative health benefits. While that may be a slightly abstract concept when compared with the immediate appeal of eating a plate of nachos in front of the TV, don't get discouraged if you slip up. As trainer Robyn Dalton of the Beacon Hill Athletic Clubs says, "The biggest mistake is giving up too soon. Becoming fit is a lifelong thing."

JOE GREENE

This month's cover photographer, Joe Greene, has been shooting fashion and advertising photography in Boston for 20 years. Born into a family of professional entertainers and trained as a musician, Joe found his first visual inspiration with a paintbrush. He turned to the camera as a teenager when he "couldn't get his ideas on canvas fast enough."

Entirely self-taught, Joe's never worked for any other photographers. His only training was at Mass Art, where he received honors as a dual major in photography and graphic design. His work in advertising photography has taken him all around the country, while his fine art photos hang in private homes and public spaces. For example, more than 200 views of Boston are installed at boutique hotel XV Beacon.

Joe applies his unique awareness of color and light to capture everything from American subcultures, captains of industry and local heroes. After following Harley Davidson riders around with his camera for five years, a major body of work, Tough Guys, is now awaiting publication.

Currently he continues to editorialize Peter Wolf's Sleepless tour, shooting both onstage and off-stage moments. Some of Greene's photos appear in the CD booklet as well. You can see more of Greene's ASMP award-winning photography on the Web at www.joegreenephoto.com.

NEW IN TOWN

Late-Night Realization

Late-night dining spots are few and far between in this town, so we felt the blow when Oskar's on South Street closed last year. But now there's Epiphany to fill the void (and literally the empty storefront) that Oskar's left in the Leather District. With a stylish lounge atmosphere and exotic Asian fusion menu (offered late into the night until the kitchen closes at 1am) Epiphany promises to draw hip hordes from Boston and beyond.

Po Chiu, director of operations at Epiphany, with owner Sierra Towers.

We were sold as soon as they said "Here's our menu." Choices included green-tea duck in a fig reduction, Pacific yellowtail morels, vegetarian glass noodles and spicy Maine lobster—not to mention gourmet sushi and sashimi. Epiphany's executive chef, Hong Kong native Cardin Lau, was most recently a master chef at Bamboo Forest at Connecticut's Mohegan Sun Resort & Casino and sushi chef at Haruki's & Oki's Japanese steakhouse in Rhode Island.

Owner Sierra Towers, formerly a manager at Big City and Sunset Bar & Grille, is aiming for a friendly atmosphere: "We're hoping for the 'Cheers complex,'" she says. "Everyone walking in should feel like Norm." The setting is more ritzy than Cheers, with its exposed brick walls, soft red lighting, black granite bars, funky menu and smoking lounge. With about 50 booths and tables and a smattering of banquettes, Epiphany is cozy while being fairly large—big enough to seat 200. *107 South St., Boston (617-338-7999). SPORTS

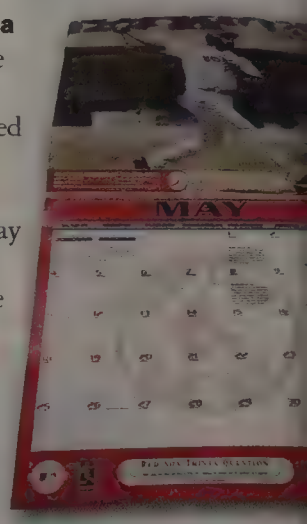
Calendar Boys



From the "Lead Time Is Such a Drag" Department... Near the end of December, we eagerly tore open our official 2003 Red Sox calendar, ready to start a new year with a fresh dose of optimism. Imagine our dismay when we realized that four of the 12 featured players on the calendar are no longer with the team. Perhaps the print run was done before several free-agent deals were sorted out in December, but Jose Offerman (Mr. May) was sent packing last August. Oh well—maybe seeing Offerman and Tony Clark staring at us for a month at a time will make us really appreciate the 2003 team.

General Yao Is in Town... The Celtics' Feb. 24 game against the Rockets will be the Boston premiere of 7-foot-5 Chinese giant-with-skills Yao Ming. If you get tickets, remember to put the ski rack on your car that night so you can take home your Yao bobblehead doll.

D'oh... Remember that infectious good cheer that pervaded New England after the Patriots' Super Bowl win? Since the Pats didn't even make the playoffs this year, we've long since thudded back to earth. But we still have to hope that syndicated columnist Dave Barry is wrong. In his year-in-review column, Barry wrote, "In sports, the New England Patriots win the Super Bowl, thus using up all the sports luck that New England has been accumulating for decades, and thereby guaranteeing that the Red Sox will not win the World Series for another 150 years."—Ezra Dyer

CLUB SCENE

Worldwide Contrast

•Friday Grooves... On the first and third Friday of every month, DJs Todd Hanna and Phil Jakob bring Groovefire night to GLO Fridays at Pravda 116. Hanna says, "We like to say that Groovefire is 'nightlife refined, house music defined.'" Catering to a well-dressed crowd that has outgrown what Hanna calls "the underage, glow-stick nonsense of some other clubs," he and his partner blend everything from deep house, funky house and disco house to Latin, tribal and progressive house. As the night moves from a relaxed pace to high-energy house, the Groovefire DJs keep the dance floor full until the last record spins. Check it out for yourself when Hanna and Jakob return to GLO Fridays at Pravda Jan. 18. www.groovefire.com.

Todd Hanna and Phil Jakob bring Groovefire to Pravda 116.

•Contrast Goes Worldwide... More than a year ago, after establishing her own globe-trotting DJ career, as well as a successful house music record label in Boston, DJ Courtney (a.k.a Courtney Powell) suddenly disappeared from the local scene. Not to worry: Both Courtney and her label, Contrast Music, have been busy working behind closed doors. After relocating to Prague, Courtney has played abroad, at such spots as Singapore's legendary Zouk, as well as in the Philippines, Peru and Spain. She recently announced, however, that she is taking an indefinite hiatus from DJ-ing while writing for an English-language weekly, The Prague Post, and running Contrast. Expect Contrast Music's 12-inch from some of Slovakia's top DJs: Mersey, Glaubic and Haberland. Also forthcoming is an EP from Boston's own Dana Kelley.

•Relaxing Rhythms... Adding some spicy, laid-back rhythms to the Central Square music scene, Rhythm and Spice now offers Downtempo every Friday night with DJ Ron Boston 6-9pm. Downtempo-goers can expect to hear a decidedly Boston interpretation of Mark Farina-esque Mushroom Jazz, fusing jazz, reggae, hip-hop and R&B. 315 Mass. Ave. in Cambridge.—Daniel Spurling

SAM SAYS

Tremendous Tresses

Hair piec from Cha

Almost every celebrity has toyed with hair extensions at one time or another. Their use has become so commonplace that it doesn't faze us to see someone sporting a pixie cut one day and waist-long hair the next. Mega Hair Elite (454 Feery St. in Everett, 617-389-1900) works wonders with extensions, either adding in strategically placed pieces or creating a full head of glorious waves. That trend developed into brightly colored strips of hair that you can clip to your locks to add contrast—like a bright red strip on platinum blond hair. H&M sells a version of these hair strips (bright red and black for $4.50). Even funkier is the new trend of hair jewelry—made from either metal, beads or jewels rather than hair. I first spotted it on the runway at Chanel's fall 2002 show where the models had long strip of metal dangling from their hair. Look for the jewelry in beads and rhinestones—and, if you're rolling in it, diamonds. You can find the last of the fall line at the Chanel boutique, but other versions will be available in stores everywhere soon.—Samantha House

TIDBITS AND MORSELS

Suds, Stars and Falafel

The second Bukowski Tavern is set to open next month.

•Dead Poet's Society... Fans of poet Charles Bukowski have a new reason to toast the deceased writer. His namesake, Bukowski Tavern on Dalton Street, is adding a second location in the Cambridge space formerly occupied by Jae's Restaurant. As any barfly who has tossed back a pint at Bukowski Tavern knows, the space is small but the spirits are high. This new location will have the same boisterous atmosphere—loud and smoky (the smoking ban will only pertain to Boston proper)—but it will be twice the size. More important, the new Bukowski's, unlike the original, will have a full liquor license—which is only fitting, since the poet's elixir of choice was the hard stuff. 1281 Cambridge St., Cambridge.

•Star Bites...Saturday Night Live funny lady Rachel Dratch was spotted dining with three female friends at Arlington's Ristorante Olivio Dec. 30. Apparently, her presence caused quite a stir. Chef/owner Angelo Girolamo said his staff was so star-struck that they were placing phone calls to friends and looking up SNL photos on the Internet to confirm the star's identity.

•Falafel Fix... The word is out. Watertown's Sepal Restaurant features falafel tasty enough for PBS's special program called "Sandwiches That You Will Like," a survey of signature sandwiches across the country. Chef/owner Walid Masoud's Sepal Delight, a combination of falafel, hummus, tahini and shepherd salad in Syrian bread, has been pleasing folks for more than 11 years. It's available in our own backyard for a mere $6.95. Catch it on Channel 2 Jan. 8 at 8pm. 17 Nichols Ave., Watertown (617-924-5753).

•Location, Location, Location... That's exactly what inspired Spire's new pre-theater menu. The onslaught of theatre-going diners moved chef Jeffrey Everts to design the four-course prix fixe menu, which includes a choice of three starters, soup, salad, two entrees and dessert—all for $40. Perhaps the best part about it is the $12 valet includes a personal car service that transports you to and from the show. What service! 90 Tremont St., Boston (617-772-0202).

THIS JUST IN

Boston's A-List

We at the IMPROPER have always considered ourselves to be part of Boston's hip scene. So it came as no surprise when e-mailed invites to something called "Boston's A-List" popped into our inboxes. Once we came down from the self-congratulatory fit of egomania, we decided to investigate. Who's behind this so-called A-list, trying to lure us to sign up with offers of free admission to events, line-cutting privileges and private-party invites? And most important, who else is deemed "A-list material"?

It turns out that it's the brainchild of longtime Boston-area promoter Steve Rayner. He launched the list in July with the help of well-connected friends. It now boasts a membership of 10,000 and will expand to 22 cities. So who are the A-listers? You are. Anyone can write to alist@bostonsalist.com with an "I'm in" message, and he or she is good to go. (Yes, it's a blow to our egos.) Hurry—once membership reaches 20,000, it will be capped off.—E.H. and Jessica Iredale

ALL THE BUZZ

Kool Kat Shirts

Tired of the investment-banking biz, local entrepreneur Katie Tiger ditched her job as vice president of corporate operations at a Boston investment bank and tapped into her creative side to custom-make a line of high-end shirts out of her home in Winthrop. Her story is interesting, sure, but what makes it unique is Tiger's specialty: $85-$265 vintage-pattern Hawaiian shirts with coconut shell or banana leaf buttons—made with loving care about as far away from Hawaii as you can get on the mainland.

Flash back to seven years ago when Tiger's husband saw fabric with a tiger pattern in a store window and asked if she could make him a shirt. She did her research, produced a shirt and soon had back orders from friends and family. Finally this summer, she ditched the full-time job and launched Kool Kat. She's sold nearly 200 already. Not bad for a gal who's never even been to Hawaii. www.koolkatfashion.com.—E.H. and J.S.

Serene Skies... What with uneven airport security and fears that fellow passengers' shoes are more dangerous than they seem, travelers need a pretty long fuse to get through it all. That's why JetBlue Airways and Crunch Fitness International have collaborated to produce something called the Crunch Fitness Airplane Yoga card, which is available in seatback pockets on JetBlue flights. The card features—what else? A series of yoga positions designed to calm you down and "maximize inflight relaxation."

Easy Rider... Taking a cab in this city is often like a box of chocolates—you never know what you're gonna get. So consider yourself lucky if you've ever landed in Louise Samson's backseat. The 14-year veteran cabbie was named Taxi Driver of the Year by Mayor Menino as part of Taxi Driver Appreciation Day last month. (She's also the first woman to receive the award in its nine-year history.) If you hop into an Independent Taxi Owners Association cab and the driver hands you a Blowpop, you're in the winning cab.

Say Goodbye to Jazzercise... If a case of the Mondays has got you down, head to T.T. the Bear's Place for the recently launched Meow Mix Mondays. First you've got an installment of the most exciting and migrating workout class around—Punk Rock Aerobics (which came to T.T.'s from its residency at the Middle East Jan. 6). After the instructor lets you stop jumping, jiving and wailing, you can't ask for a better cooldown than this one: The class is immediately followed by live acoustic music. Who needs a shower anyway? 10 Brookline St., Cambridge (617-492-BEAR). The first Monday of every month, 6:30pm. $7.

One Fine Day... Long time sweethearts and Pigalle co-owners Marc Orfaly and Kerri Folley have at last made it official. The lovebirds bucked Christmas Eve tradition and took off to New York to tie the knot! Their last-minute elopement meant that their friends had only two hours' notice to get down to City Hall in New York to take part in the wedding. After the wedding, the couple threw a champagne celebration at the chic Balthazar and then dined at Le Bernadin.

Improper LP... Our IMPROPER Impersonals page may not inspire many walks down the aisle, but, to our surprise, it has inspired art. After reading an Impersonal in the Sept. 26, 2001, issue, Dana Labb of local rock outfit Labb wrote the song "14 Hour Date," a musing on an bittersweet Impersonal titled "Neighbor." Frontman Dana Labb says, "The Impersonal was like the greatest love song never written, so I just tried to do it some justice and get it heard by a few more ears."

Euro Haus... Feel as though every home you enter has a Pottery Barn catalog on the table and a Restoration Hardware knicknack tucked in a corner? Now there's a solution to the monotony of ubiquitous home furnishings. "Unique" is the name of the game. Literally. Lekker Unique Home Furnishings is set to open mid-January in the South End, and promises to stock rare American, Asian and European brands that are hard to find in the States. 1317 Washington St., Boston (617-542-6464). www.lekkerhome.com.

Film Notes... Another Boston native's celluloid skills are making waves at the Sundance Film Festival. Local gal Nancy Kates' film, Brother Outsider: The Life of Bayard Rustin, a documentary on the gay civil-rights activist, will screen at Sundance Jan. 17. For those who couldn't make it to Utah, the film airs on PBS Jan. 20 at 10pm.

Ezra BY EZRA DYER

Meet Lance

He doesn't cook Buffalo wings naked, but that's just as well

It's been more than a month since I pleaded with the IMPROPER reading public to come live with me, and you may be wondering how that all turned out.

My column generated a bunch of responses, and I think that I would've been happy to live with any of the ladies who came to look at the place. However, I was on the hook for December's rent, so I was more interested in finding the $670 Woman than in finding Ms. January. Hence I sucked it up and registered with an online roommate-finding service, coughing up $60 to get in touch with people looking for rooms. I figured it would be a sound investment if I found someone to pay for December.

It is a testament to the quality of this publication's readers that I was not actually scared by anyone who responded to my column. But I was immediately a bit skeptical of the convicted-ax-murderer factor of the online service. The first guy who e-mailed directed me to his user profile, which included his picture, sans shirt. Who puts a shirtless picture of himself on a roommate-matching site? Maybe that was my fault. Maybe I spaced out and wrote "must include shirtless picture of self" in my listing. But that eliminated him right away. His pecs were clearly too small.

However, I was soon e-mailed by a guy named Lance who sounded interested. With apologies to all the Lances out there, I had the irrational idea that I wouldn't like him because I knew a kid named Lance in preschool who always had a runny nose. I immediately conjured up an image of a guy with a constant runny nose, sitting on our couch, sniffling. A sniffly Lance—that would be the worst. Of course, just because someone has an unusual name is no reason to draw conclusions about him based on associations you have with someone else of that name. If you meet a guy named Ezra, you shouldn't automatically assume that he's chiseled and nice-smelling and humble, although that will likely be the case.

To get to the point, Lance came, he saw, he moved in Dec. 15. He called back with a yea the morning after he looked at the apartment, narrowly beating out Sara, who had also looked at the apartment and e-mailed later in the afternoon. The fact that two people expressed a desire to live with me on the same day is a sad commentary on the housing situation in this city.

So I didn't find a scantily clad female buffalo wing chef, but Lance is a solid prospect who brings a lot to the table (such as, I think, a table). He just moved here from Baltimore for a financial job, he's 23 and he likes to watch football. In fact, he was on his way down the stairs after looking at our place when he returned, knocked on the door, and said, "I forgot to ask...Do you guys like to watch football?" Does a bear wear a hat? I crossed my fingers that Lance's job didn't pay very much and he would want to live with us instead of at the much nicer place he'd just looked at around the corner.

Besides a shared interest in football, this is what I know of Lance thus far: He's pretty tall and thus angles the showerhead almost straight out, as tall people are wont to do. If Scott got in the shower after Lance and didn't adjust the showerhead, he'd never get wet. And Lance doesn't switch the valve back to the tub setting when he's done, which means that the next user gets his arm sprayed by cold water from the shower when he turns it on. I'm hopeful that Lance can be retrained on this issue.

THE FACT THAT TWO PEOPLE EXPRESSED A DESIRE TO LIVE WITH ME ON THE SAME DAY IS A SAD COMMENTARY ON THE HOUSING SITUATION IN THIS CITY.

More important, though, Lance has excellent remote control skills, and that's the sort of thing that just can't be taught. The big test came during Monday Night Football, when Lance found himself with the remote during most of the approximately 597 commercial breaks. As he flipped from the game to the Ginger Lynn E! True Hollywood Story and back to the game just as the commercials would end, I found myself thinking, "That's just when I would have changed the channel if I had the remote right now." This kid has instincts.

And if it's any consolation to Sara, the day after Lance moved in, the bolts holding the toilet tank to the bowl disintegrated into rust, and the water drained all over the floor. To Lance's credit, he didn't so much as sniffle about it. iB

You think that's funny?

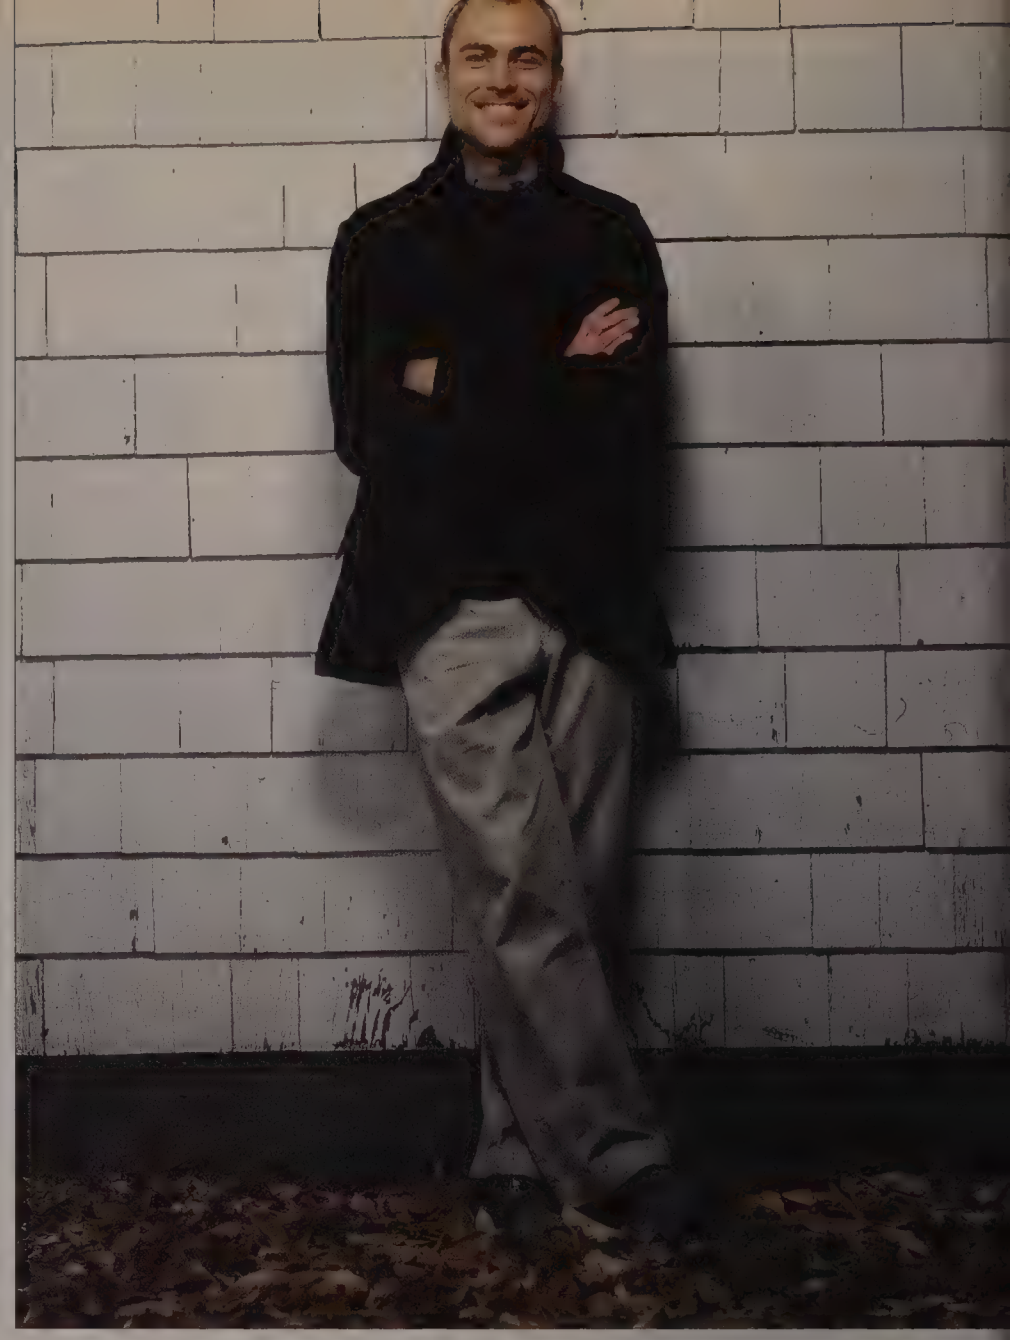
Soroff/On

Lars-Erik Fisk

BY JONATHAN SOROFF



Award-winning sculptor Lars-Erik Fisk, 31, grew up in Norwich, Vt., and went to high school in nearby Hanover, N.H. He studied art history and studio art at the University of Vermont, spending a semester in Rome. Since 1995, he has been creating artwork in the form of spheres he calls balls. A basic form that anyone can understand, he sees these orbs as a uniform system by which such familiar and iconic items as a Volkswagen bug, a school bus, buildings, highways and landscapes can be reduced to their essence.

In addition to his fine art career, he has served as art director for the wildly popular rock band Phish. An itinerant artist for the past two years, he opted to work out of a van to save on studio expenses. He was recently awarded the prestigious Rappaport Prize from the DeCordova Museum and Sculpture Park in Lincoln. His work has also been shown at the Hood Museum of Art in Hanover, N.H., the Berkshire Botanical Garden in Stockbridge, the Contemporary Artists Center in North Adams, the Socrates Sculpture Park in New York and the Franconia Sculpture Park in Shafer, Minn. He currently lives in Burlington, Vt.

Jonathan Soroff: If I crumple this piece of paper into a ball, is it art?
Lars-Erik Fisk: If you say so, then it is.
JS: What's your definition of art?
LF: In the here and now, it would have to include anything that questions art itself.
JS: So what makes something a work of art as opposed to merely decoration?
LF: Not too much. It's all context.
JS: Favorite color in a box of 64 Crayola crayons?
LF: Probably something pink. That waxy, opaque pink color that's like Barbie flesh.
JS: Favorite texture?
LF: I'm quite fond of the bumpy yellow strip on the edge of subway platforms.
JS: Favorite artwork at a Boston museum?
LF: Well, it's not a specific work, but I love the environment at the Isabella Stewart Gardner, the way there's no typical museum layout. I like how she stuffed things in corners and mismatched bits from totally different periods in history.
JS: I've heard your work (deconstructing vastly disparate objects into a consistent form) compared to Jasper Johns'.
LF: That's a huge honor. Obviously, he's someone I've thought a lot about.
JS: Damien Hirst—his cow's heads in formaldehyde and frozen bags of his own blood—is he a con artist or a fine artist?
LF: Good question. I admire his work quite a bit, but I admire his con artistry just as much. Not just the shock value of the work itself but the way he carries it all off and gets away with it.
JS: On some level, are all artists charlatans?
LF: In the sense of being magicians spinning something out of nothing, yeah.
JS: What about the idea of the sacred monster, like Picasso, who by all accounts was a highly objectionable person? Do artists deserve to get away with that?
LF: I think people want that of artists. They pin a lot of their own desires and fantasies on them.

"I THINK PEOPLE PIN A LOT OF THEIR OWN DESIRES AND FANTASIES ON ARTISTS."

LF: Well, a lot of my work is very site specific, so I'm pretty sensitive to that. I think Jeff Koons' Flower Puppy looked fabulous in Rockefeller Center.
JS: Speaking of Koons, how do you feel about artists who don't actually make the work that has their names attached to it—someone who has a factory full of employees making the stuff he tells 'em to?
LF: I don't think it's really relevant anymore, or ever was.
JS: Is that because artists like Rubens and Michelangelo had workshops cranking out stuff they were credited with?
LF: Sure. It's basically the same. I don't think artists have a responsibility in the making as much as in the conceptualizing.
JS: So is Phish the Grateful Dead of the new millennium, or what?
LF: They were fortunate to have inherited quite a bit from the Dead. They offer not just great music but this whole cult of somebody to follow around. There's a lot of folklore in the whole experience.
JS: How did you get involved with Phish?
LF: I was in college at the time they were becoming popular. They were the best band in Burlington. They're great fun to see and really good guys. It was fun to watch them get where they got to. Anyway, I eventually got connected to them through their management company.
JS: What did being art director for them entail?
LF: Well, that was a special occasion thing: three days of multimedia festivities, anything visual to do with those shows, creating environmental installations. We essentially had to design cities that had all the elements and infrastructure. For instance, one year I laid it out with Roman urban planning in mind. Another year, I was thinking of a Chinese garden. It could involve 50 portable toilets and working them into an installation that would accommodate huge groups of people.
JS: Let's test your Vermont IQ. Pot-smoking: pro or con?
LF: I'm pro.
JS: Gay marriage?
LF: Hey, I'm a Vermonter.
JS: How does an artist price his work?
LF: Well, the smart-ass answer is that it's worth whatever the dealer says it is. I've always been told to imagine what you think is fair and then double that.
JS: So one of your balls goes for...?
LF: Depends. Anywhere from $3,000 to $50,000.
JS: Is art school worth it?
LF: Interesting question. I had a liberal arts education, and only one semester of art school. I'm considering going back for my MFA, which I don't know is necessary, but I'm beginning to understand the value of a formal technical program.
JS: One collection—public or private—you'd most like to see your work in?
LF: The Museum of Modern Art in New York.
JS: What role should the visual arts play in society?
LF: They should please, baffle, clarify, mystify, edify, everything you can imagine.
JS: Why are people so intimidated by art?
LF: I think it comes from a fear that they may not understand it, or that somebody's trying to pull the wool over their eyes, which drives me to do what I do, actually. I aim for the notion behind the work to be absolutely understandable and accessible to everyone.
JS: Is there anyone in the canon whose work you think is a load of BS?
LF: Well, I've read about the pop artists in the '60s who were making work solely in response to the abstract expressionists. Their whole mentality was how important it was to express their own selves with a capital "S." So anyone who thinks their ego is the point that sort of bugs me. It's self-indulgent.
JS: Most important quality in an artist?
LF: Integrity. IB

GET PUMPED UP

BY JULIE SHORT AND EZRA DYER PHOTOGRAPHS BY MIKE MERGEN

A couple of years ago, two IMPROPER staffers, Ezra Dyer and Julie Short, abandoned their regular weight-lifting and running routines to try some of the hottest fitness classes around the city, including kung fu, water aerobics, urban rebounding and video dance. This year, Ezra and Julie checked in with local gyms once more to test out the latest trends and help readers find ways to mix up their exercise regimens. Pilates and power yoga, big in 2001, still top the list of popular classes, say the trainers we spoke to this year. But a few new routines have cropped up, with fusion classes such as Body Blast (a combination of spinning, running and abdominal work) and Power Interval Training (like high school gym class, but kicked up a notch) drawing hard-core gymheads. Classes that develop both body and mind—such as Spin Yoga (a stationary bike workout followed by a yoga segment) and Yoga for Golfers—are also in vogue among the fit set.

Maria Shea, corporate fitness director at Healthworks, attributes the popularity of cross-training classes to the time constraints most people face. "They're trying to fit everything into one hour: some cardio, some flexibility, some mind and some strength," she says.

So put on your sneakers, grab a water bottle and join us for our latest tour de fitness, a survey of some of the trendiest classes at eight local clubs. We've scored each workout for fun and difficulty (10 signifies the most fun and the most exhausting), and we promise to make you sweat.

P.I.T. STOP — Julie

Wellbridge's P.I.T. (Power Interval Training) is like going back to gym class in junior high—minus the dorky uniforms, smelly lockers and shower-room antics (not to mention the dreaded Presidential Physical Fitness Awards). Sure, there are the popular kids—a group of men and women who attend the class regularly and seem to know each other well—but classmates are actually nice to uncoordinated newcomers (read: me), offering shouts of encouragement and high-fives.

We start by forming a circle and doing a series of warm-ups—sit-ups, push-ups and jumping jacks. Then we pair off and head to various stations around the room for two-minute intervals. At one station, there are dumbbells; for two minutes, the two people stationed there do arm curls, deltoid raises, tricep presses and shoulder presses. At the same time, two folks across the room face each other and do 20 push-ups, clapping hands with each other in between each push-up. At another station, people hold themselves up on their elbows and toes in a horizontal "plank position"; at yet another, they do sit-ups while facing each other and passing a heavy ball between them. My partner and I begin at the obstacle course. At instructor Chris Cabe's command, I race around a zigzag line of cones and then jump over a series of weight bars spanning two plastic steps and back. Then it's back around the cones again to tag my partner, who completes the same course—all in two minutes or less. "Switch!" shouts Cabe, and we move to the next station. An hour later, it's over. The class combines elements of sports training with short, high-intensity intervals (including both cardio and weight-resistance drills)—but it sure felt more like playtime to me.

A GAME OF ONE-ON-ONE — Ezra

If anyone is a candidate for BodyScapes' personal training program, it's me. I've been working out for about eight years, yet I've never once had a lesson of any sort. Am I doing the right type of exercises for what I want to accomplish? Is my form correct? How can I stay motivated when I just got Grand Theft Auto: Vice City for Christmas? Trainer Shaun Spaulding set out to answer these questions and more in the course of designing a custom workout for me.

First, I have to state my goals. This is the easy part. My primary goal is to have a body like Terrell Owens without going to the gym much at all. So now what?

I'd assumed that at BodyScapes, you have your program designed, a trainer demonstrates how to do it and then you're returned to the wild of your own gym to put it into practice. That's partly true, but a good chunk of the reason you're at BodyScapes is that you can get a much better workout with someone challenging you every step of the way than you would by yourself. For instance, when Spaulding has me pick up dumbbells for bicep curls, in the middle of the set he presses down on the top of the weights as I strain to pull them up. After that routine I can barely lift a cup of water, which I well know is something that never happens when I'm the only person dictating how hard I work out.

As I move from the elliptical machine to triceps presses, medicine-ball squats and cable flies while lying on an exercise ball, I come to the conclusion that the BodyScapes program is like working out with an extremely demanding friend. Besides learning from your coach's expertise, the physical interaction takes you beyond the fatigue level that you typically reach solo. Some people use BodyScapes as their primary workout; others check in every now and then to tune up their routine. Even as a supplement to a gym membership, the BodyScapes program strikes me as a good way to push yourself and, perhaps most important, to keep you motivated.

BodyScapes, 1 Huntington Ave. (617-267-5766). One-hour sessions by appointment. Difficulty level: 6-10. Fun level: 6.

IRONMEN NEED APPLY — Julie

The name of the class is Body Blast—but it should b called Body Torture. That's the best way to describe th class at Boston Athletic Club that combines 25 minutes spinning (on a stationary bike), 35 minutes of interv training on the treadmill and 15 minutes of abdomin work. Trainer Alexis Tyson (the IMPROPER's cover girl th issue) developed the course this year after noticing tha more and more club members were interested in triathlo training. She combined two out of the three legs of triathlon—cycling and running—and then added an ab dominal workout for the last segment. BAC members pa extra for the privilege of being pushed to their limits fo eight weeks. "Most people tend not to challenge them selves as much as they think they do," Tyson says. "That my job." Down the road, Tyson says she may add swim ming for the true triathlon experience, but for now, th course is grueling enough, if you ask me.

In the spinning studio, we do a series of sprints an high-tension intervals set to pounding music. Just whe I think I can't spin another minute, Tyson says it's time fo running. We head to a line of treadmills reserved for th class and do a series of sprints and hills for 35 minute Normally, that's the total time that I work out; my energ stores are already depleted after 25 minutes of spinning Tyson stands in front of us and instructs us to adjust ou speed and incline for two- or three-minute interval Sometimes we sprint, and sometimes we climb hills at base speed that we determine individually. We end th session with a one-minute, all-out sprint. I'm spent, bu now it's time to do sit-ups and stretching. After that, limp to the showers. My body has definitely been blaste

TAKE IT OFF — Ezra

It's possible that the cheer residents of Camp X-Ray i Cuba might be the only pe ple in the western hem sphere who haven't yet hear of Crunch's Cardio Stri Tease class. Michael Jackso dangling his baby over tha railing didn't get this muc media attention. The sessio I attended had a 2-to-1 stu dent-to-journalist ratio, wit six actual students sharin the room with myself, IM PROPER photographer Mik Mergen and a guy from NP who didn't ask to intervie me. (Apparently my body not made for radio.)

Instructor Cey Jay doesn usually teach this class but is pressed into duty for th first time because the regular instructor has pneumoni I worry that this might be a stripping-related malais until I enter the aerobics room, which is so hot that I do i fact want to take off all my clothes.

For a non-stripper, Jay knows his stuff. We begin b stretching and warming up, then quickly move into th lesson, putting together a series of moves until we have basic routine involving a real feather boa and the remova of one piece of clothing. We repeat the moves and ad new ones at such a rapid pace that I find myself sweatin and panting. At one point I even take off my T-shirt in fit of sexiness.

The class winds down with a freestyle session in whic we are all given portable waist-high "stripper poles" wit which to do our thang. I grab a boa and get buck wild, but, as you know, it's hard to go too crazy when your stripper pole isn't bolted down. A word to the wise: Wear a few layers so that you can practice garment-removal without embarrassment. A word to the guys: I was the only male student in the class. Enough said?

Crunch, 17 Winter St., Boston (617-338-9001). Wed., 7:30pm and Sat., 12pm. Difficulty level: 7. Fun level: 9.

BODY AND MIND — Julie

"Spin Yoga? Is that where you sit and meditate on the benefits of spinning and hope that it has a positive effect on your body?" jokes a friend as I head to Healthworks on a Sunday morning. Although I wish that were the case, I quickly discover that sweating is a big part of this class. First, instructor Mary Oscategui helps me adjust a stationary bicycle, and then we take off. I'm a newcomer to spinning, and it takes me a while to feel comfortable as we do a series of seated and upright sprints and hill climbs set to music over the next 45 minutes. It's amazing how exhausting and painful cycling can be on the quadriceps. Though Oscategui suggests speed and tension increases, the good news is that you can pedal at your own pace and adjust the tension to suit your own strength. Some of the women cycle so fast that their legs are a blur.

Finally, we coast to a stop, do some stretching and then head upstairs to a studio for 45 minutes of meditative, mind-soothing body stretching based on hatha yoga. We unroll our mats and stretch our bodies, opening up the hip joints, chest, back and shoulders—"all the muscles that get a lot of work during the class," says Oscategui. People have a tendency to hold tension in one area more than others—whether it be from gripping the handlebars too tightly, pushing the pedals with the balls of their feet instead of their whole foot, or tensing up their shoulders. The yoga portion of the class helps restore you to both a healthy mental and physical state." We continue to stretch, using static and isometric holds to release the muscles, and at the end, we close our eyes and relax fully lying on the floor in corpse pose. I nearly fall asleep.

Healthworks Fitness Center for Women, 41 Stuart St., Boston (617-859-7700). Sun., 10am. Difficulty level: 8. Fun level: 8.

GOLF POSE — Ezra

A lot of guys think that yoga classes are filled with a bunch of lithe vegetarian women who can fold themselves into carry-on luggage. Whether that's true at any other yoga class, Sports Club/LA's Bethany Cantin says that her Yoga for Golfers class attracts plenty of neophytes (aka men), which means that even if you think "Ujaya breath" requires some Listerine, you'll fit right in.

I'm about as flexible as an icicle, and a common yoga pose like jatharna parivartanasana (spinal twist) sounded like it would be as hard to execute as it is to pronounce. But as we begin taking deep breaths and slowly stretching into various poses, the intimidation goes away, and I see how this would apply to golf. The slow breathing and meditative aspect help maintain focus in a game that demands the ability to narrow your attention repeatedly over a span of hours, while the poses are designed to stretch and strengthen muscles that you use in your swing .

In "lightning bolt," for instance, you bend your knees and touch your right elbow to your left knee, then reach up behind you toward the ceiling as far as you can go. This strengthens the legs, improves balance and releases stiffness in the shoulders, all of which should help your game from tee box to green. Cantin even recommends striking a pose now and then during the course of a game to help concentrate on your next swing, but if your golf buddies are like mine, then you might want to make sure you're behind a tree before coming into tree pose, as a barrage of beer cans will definitely disturb your balance. That notwithstanding, yoga seems like a good way to lower your handicap while learning a few tricks that will make you feel healthier and avoid injuries both on and off the course.

Sports Club/LA, 4 Avery St., Boston (617-375-8200). Classes consists of three one-hour sessions, beginning in February. Difficulty level: 5. Fun level: 7.

ACEAMETRICS — Julie

Jumping, leaping, hopping and bounding over objects sounds like a lot of fun, doesn't it? It may remind you of a childhood romp through the woods, but when you add a stopwatch, plus the demands of coach Acea Theroux (named Boston's Best personal trainer by this magazine in 2002), you've got a rigorous, leg-sculpting, heart-pumping aerobics class that's both exhausting and exhilarating. It's called Plyo Power, and it focuses on building lower body strength, speed, power, coordination and endurance.

Theroux says the class is designed to keep your heart rate in the "fat-burning zone" for the entire time. To accomplish this goal, the hard-core group of 15 that's gathered at Beacon Hill Athletic Club (at the ungodly hour of 6:15am) jumps up, over and around a plastic step—performing each jumping exercise for one minute. Those are immediately followed by a speed/agility drill—high knees or speed step-ups, for example—focusing on creating a rhythm first, then speeding up the tempo once we feel comfortable. Theroux stresses the importance of correct stance (keeping the spine straight and the hips tucked under to absorb the body's weight as the knees bend) and takeoff and landing positions (landing from the outside part of the foot and immediately rocking back on the heels). Between segments, we rest for only 45 seconds. Theroux says a longer resting period encourages muscle bulk to increase. Apparently, this is how Plyo Power is different from plyometrics—Theroux's class focuses on developing and shaping the muscles instead of building bulk. Looking around at Theroux's devotees, I see that he's been successful—so successful that he's trademarked the name "Plyo Power." The class is thoroughly exhausting, and my upper thighs and calves ache for days. I'd go back in a second…if only the class started after dawn.

Beacon Hill Athletic Clubs, 85 Atlantic Ave., Boston (617-742-0055). Times vary. Difficulty level: 9. Fun level: 8.

SLIPPERY SLOPE — Ezra

I'm not a very hard-core skier. I make a few runs in the morning, eat lunch, ski some more and quit early because my legs are burning and the choice between pain and cold beer is all too easy. But what if my legs didn't sign off at 2 o'clock? I'd enjoy myself more, get better value from my insanely expensive lift ticket and maybe burn a few of the calories that I inevitably chug back at the lodge. Enter Fitcorp's Ski and Snowboard Conditioning class.

Exercise physiologist Eric Monahan puts together a circuit of exercises designed to keep you carving turns from sunrise 'til the lifts close. Participants spend a minute and a half at each station and make two laps around the room. Exercises include weighted lunges, squats on a CoreBoard and a variety of diabolical ab-killing exercise-ball routines.

On my first trip around the room, I go all out, mainly because I don't realize that there is a second lap. "Nobody ever does push-ups for the whole time. I'm impressed," says Monahan as I finish my first station. By the second time I hit the push-up area, I am considerably less gung-ho. The circuit is a good mix of exercises that get your heart going (the spin bikes) and strengthen specific muscle groups (the CoreBoard squats).

Perhaps the best testament to the program's effectiveness is that I was sore in all the same places that I am after a day on the slopes…which means that the next time I go skiing, maybe I'll quit a little later. Maybe.

TEAR AND LOATHING
ON THE BATHROOM SCALE

If you've started the new year with a resolution to shed those extra pounds, be sure you've got the right attitude for long-term success

BY SUSAN ABBATTISTA

Nothing instills anxiety in quite the same way as slipping on your favorite pair of jeans nd realizing, with a squeeze of panic, hat they are too tight. Many of us have hat experience around the new year, vhen we see visible proof—the zipper's trained grimace—of what we've sus-pected all along: We've gained weight. Maybe we were lured by too many empting treats during the holidays, or naybe we mindlessly munched hrough a year of chips and cookies. But nake no mistake; the jeans are tight. This is it!" we proclaim. "I'm going on diet!"

If losing weight is (or should be) one f your top New Year's resolutions, you re not alone. More than 60 percent of dults in this country are overweight, ccording to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention. Indeed, lots of eople struggle with the personal an-uish of tugging on a zipper, becoming reathless when they climb stairs or vanting to hide their eating from pub-ic view. And if those things aren't bad nough, doctors repeatedly say that eing overweight increases the risk for erious health problems, such as heart isease, diabetes and cancer.

But before you put yourself on a strict iet and vow to swear off the late night Oreo binges and eat nothing but Lean Cuisine, give yourself an attitude heck. Are you unwittingly setting ourself up for failure? The fact is, de-pite the best of intentions, our resolve o eat better can disintegrate when we et tired, stressed and hungry. That's hy we've asked five local nutrition ex-erts to share their pointers for making neaningful, health-related New Year's esolutions—ones that will last. (To nd out more about nutritionists, see ne sidebar on page 24.) Here are their ips for not only starting off the new ear on the right foot but keeping your-elf fit for a lifetime.

DON'T SABOTAGE YOURSELF BY SKIPPING BREAKFAST

The old-fashioned advice you used to get from your mom is still the first rule for a healthy lifestyle: Eat breakfast. "The attitude in America is 'Oh, food is fattening, and I don't have time to eat breakfast,'" says Nancy Clark, a registered dietitian, author and nutrition counselor at SportsMedicine Associates in Brookline. "But you need to fuel up your body for an active day just as you'd fuel up a car before a long trip." Those who skip meals, especially breakfast, just get hungrier and fatter in the long run, says Clark.

Consider the irony: Even though eating breakfast has numerous benefits, such as improving metabolism and helping to prevent overeating later in the day, skipping breakfast is one of the most common errors that overweight people make when they go on a diet, doctors say. They may be "saving up" those calories for later or they may not have the time to prepare a healthy breakfast. But research has shown that those who lose weight—and keep it off for years—are tried-and-true breakfast eaters, according to the National Weight Control Registry, an ongoing study conducted by Brown University Medical School.

Even people who barely have enough time to dress themselves in the morning can still eat breakfast, say nutritionists. You just have to "think outside the Wheaties box," says Jenna Hollenstein, a registered dietitian who does nutritional counseling at Healthworks Back Bay. "If you don't have time for a bowl of whole-grain cereal, low-fat milk and fruit, find an alternative that works for you." Good choices include a cup of yogurt and a handful of granola; an energy bar (like Luna, Pria or Balance) and a banana; or a packet of instant oatmeal that you can make at work, along with a café latte made with low- or nonfat milk.

FIND CREATIVE WAYS TO GET "FIVE A DAY"

You've known it since you were a kid: Fruits and vegetables are good for you. Still, many of us think it's impossible to consume the five daily servings of fruits and veggies combined (minimum!) recommended by government agencies and the American Cancer Society to reduce the risk of many diseases.

To boost the quality of your diet with the vitamins, minerals and fiber that fruits and veggies provide, first remember that a serving is smaller than you might think: just a half-cup of raw, cooked, canned or frozen fruits/vegetables, or one cup of raw leafy vegetables. Then realize that with a little forethought, you can boost the nutritional value of foods you already enjoy. Nutritionists suggest the following: add frozen vegetables to soups and sauces; toss some sliced vegetables on top of a slice of pizza; add an extra serving of vegetables to a container of Lean Cuisine; keep baby carrots or grape tomatoes at your desk at work; stir some chopped broccoli or peppers into scrambled eggs; mix shredded carrots into your tuna salad; add slices of cucumber or roasted peppers to your sandwich.

Don't be afraid to rely on frozen vegetables and canned fruits; some experts say that their nutritional values are equal to those of fresh produce, especially if the foods are frozen or canned just after being picked. And new resealable bags make it easy to pour out some vegetables or berries and save the rest for next time. (To learn more about incorporating more healthful foods into your diet, visit www.5aday.gov.)

INCREASE YOUR AWARENESS OF YOUR HABITS, EMOTIONS AND FOOD CHOICES

Awareness starts with your own behavior: what you eat, when and why. If you don't have a clear picture of how your diet looks as a whole, perhaps you should try a useful tool that nutritionists use with their clients: the food journal. By writing down everything you eat for a week, you may discover that you consume most of your calories at night. In fact, nutritionists say, many clients have a common evening ritual: come home from work, throw open the refrigerator and consume anything in sight. If that's the case for you, you can reduce that after-work ravenous feeling by eating a "timed snack" (such as a tablespoon of peanut butter on a slice of wheat bread, or a carton of yogurt with a piece of fruit) at 5pm to ensure that you won't go overboard when you get home.

Amy Gleason, a registered dietitian who does counseling at Wellbridge Fitness Centers and McLean Hospital's eating disorder program, also uses the food journal to help clients distinguish between "emotional hunger" and "stomach hunger." Along with writing down what and when they ate, she urges clients to record "whatever was going through their head." Gradually, she says, people begin to see patterns. "It takes time to get to the bottom of emotional eating, and to replace that kind of eating with something else enjoyable, like taking a bubble bath or going for a walk," says Gleason. She helps clients to come up with a list of 10 things they can do to comfort themselves besides eat. "If those other things don't work," she says, "then they can go ahead and eat."

It is also important to increase your awareness about food, what constitutes a healthy diet and how much is enough. Commit to finding out as much as you can about the foods you gravitate toward. Learn about the food groups, read labels, log on to fast-food restaurants' Web sites and ask how dishes are prepared when you go out to eat. For more information about making healthy choices and understanding the latest fitness recommendations and trends, visit the American Dietetic Association's (ADA's) www.eatright.org, and Tufts University's Nutrition Navigator, www.navigator.tufts.edu, which ranks other nutrition-related sites based on their timeliness and credibility.

SET REALISTIC GOALS, AND TAKE YOUR TIME

Being panicked or fed up about how much you weigh can make you set unrealistic goals, like starving yourself for six weeks or wanting to look like Shakira in a string bikini. "Stick to things that you can achieve, like eating breakfast every day and eating one more serving of fruit and vegetables each day, or adding 10 minutes to your walk to and from the bus stop," says Heidi Reichenberger, a registered dietitian who is also a spokeswoman for the ADA.

Nutritionists emphasize that fast results will not be long-term results, and that small, healthy changes are extremely valuable because they add up over time and slowly replace old habits. "There's no rush to lose the weight," says Amy Gleason. "Instead of saying 'I'm going on a diet for six weeks,' say 'I'm going to take the next six weeks to figure out how to take better care of myself for the long term.'"

It bears mentioning that if you plan to lose more than 15 to 20 pounds or have health problems, you should check with your doctor before starting a weight-loss program.

FEEL THE JOY OF TAKING CARE OF YOURSELF, MOMENT BY MOMENT

Whether they realize it or not, many people use extreme diets as a way to punish themselves for their "lack of will power" or for simply "feeling like a blob." But lifestyle changes don't have to be painful. "One of the things I tell clients is to enjoy the process of taking better care of themselves and realize how much progress they're making," says Randi Konikoff Beranbaum, a registered dietitian at Tufts University. "The whole process is very powerful—power to make positive changes, and to do things that they weren't able to do before, like saying 'no' to a big piece of cheesecake, being able to walk an extra mile or increasing the resistance on the treadmill."

Sometimes, a punishing attitude is fueled by the belief that being healthy is an all-or-nothing proposition. After eating something they've deemed "forbidden," many people feel that they've blown it for the day, and that causes a downward spiral of unhealthy eating. "Just because you had a huge brunch doesn't mean you can't go for a walk afterward and round out the day with a salad or something similarly light," says Jenna Hollenstein. "Every moment is another chance to start fresh. Put down the fork, walk out the door, cut that portion in half, step away from the french fries. Realize that you are capable of achieving a healthy lifestyle and taking the steps to get there." iB

WHAT THE EXPERTS CAN DO FOR YOU

In a world of "Supersize it," drive-through windows, grabbing a candy bar for lunch and trying to make sense of confusing nutritional claims, it's hard to know what to eat and how healthy we really are. Nutritionists are there to help. They promote healthy eating habits by evaluating a person's eating patterns, educating about food and exercise and strategizing with each client to find a program that works.

People seek a nutritionist's help for a number of reasons. Some are professional athletes who are concerned with physical performance. Others have medical problems, such as high-blood pressure or diabetes, that must be managed on a day-to-day basis. Many more are ordinary people who want to lose weight and can't figure out how to stop eating in ways that they know are unhealthy.

Much of nutritionists' appeal—and their success—is tied to their one-on-one approach. Unlike a diet book that lists the same meals for everyone, nutritionists get to know you; they find out what changes you need to make and which strategies "work" for you. During a typical visit a nutritionist will interview you about your lifestyle, diet and overall health. Based on your weight and height, the nutritionist will calculate your Body Mass Index, one indicator of a healthy weight. (Not all clients are overweight; some are underweight and others are at a healthy weight but struggle with conditions such as fatigue, digestive disorders, food allergies and headaches, among others.) To check for deficiencies, the clinician may also evaluate your muscle strength, reflexes, and the condition of your hair, skin, nails and eyes.

After coming up with a clear picture of your health, the nutritionist will devise a plan that incorporates the healthy behaviors and food choices that have been lacking. Sometimes the strategy will involve a weight-loss plan, but nutritionists emphasize that weight loss is just one part of the big picture. For most people, the plan will include adding more fruits and vegetables, more lean forms of protein, more whole grains and more exercise. Sometimes nutritionists will also recommend supplements, like a daily vitamin, depending on a client's health.

When seeking a nutritionist's help, be sure to check his or her credentials. According to the American Dietetic Association (ADA), the nation's largest organization of nutrition professionals, anyone can claim to be a "nutritionist," but true nutrition experts are registered dietitians. A registered dietitian, or RD, has completed a series of academic and professional requirements. Be aware that many dietitians do prefer to use the term "nutritionist," because it more accurately describes what they do—help people make better nutritional choices. "Dietitian," on the other hand, can sometimes imply "putting people on diet," which is a misguided view.

Although it has become easier and easier to make poor dietary choices (just think "value meals"), it has also become easier to find someone who can guide you. The ADA reports that its national membership has nearly doubled in the past two decades, with about 40,000 members in 1980 and 70,000 in 2002. To find a nutritionist, check with your doctor or your gym, or use the "Find a Dietitian" feature of the ADA's Web site, www.eatright.org. In the Boston area, a one-hour session with a registered dietitian in private practice usually costs between $80 and $120, according to the ADA.—S.A.

Karen Kerney Fincutter: Assistant fitness manager, five months; personal trainer, two and a half years

Don't look at this as a huge lifestyle change. Rather, focus on small changes in physical activities or diet that you can do one day at a time. Someone who never eats breakfast and just drinks coffee all day can try eating breakfast four days a week for a month. Over time, those small changes become major changes. They become lifetime habits.

Also, hire a trainer. It's an unbelievable source of motivation, support and accountability. A trainer will get you the most results in the least amount of time. Even a trainer needs a trainer. For the first time in my life, I have a trainer, and now I notice changes that have happened because of him.

Josh Smith: Fitness and program director, six years

Work out with someone. When I play basketball with a friend, I don't really think of it as exercise; it's more of a social thing. I've been running with the same person for four years, and it's kept me motivated. Instead of going out for drinks after work, meet someone for a run. It's easy to fall off the wagon without someone helping you out.

In addition, it's important to be comfortable in your gym. A lot of women feel intimidated in the weight room with all the guys because, quite honestly, a lot of guys are dumb. But a lot of gyms now have a women's-only fitness room with its own dumbbell section. And vice versa with the aerobics classes. For men, it can be cliquey and intimidating with lots of women. Find a spot where you're comfortable. I also suggest running outside three or four times a week. It's more of a natural surface, if you can bear the New England weather. You can get right out there, and you don't have to be a member of a health club.

People who have trouble [sticking to a workout schedule] usually make unrealistic goals. Their New Year's resolution is to go to the gym every day, and it's not going to happen, especially for people who don't work out in the first place. Don't expect immediate results. In January, the gym is packed. Everyone thinks they're going to lose 10 pounds in a month, but losing weight slowly is better. Don't jump in full-bore, but keep a steady commitment.

At the gym, change your routine. Don't always use the same piece of equipment at the same intensity level. I try to get people to keep a jump rope behind them on the machine so they can quickly get off and do a few jumps. Throw some intervals into the mix.

Consistency is key. People get frustrated when they don't see results right away, but I always tell them, "You didn't gain the weight overnight, and you aren't going to lose it overnight."

You can get a workout anywhere, and that goes for people who travel. It's not what you do only during that hour but the rest of the day too. Walking is a great place to start. All you need is a pair of sneakers.

Just as important is what you put into your body. Eat small, frequent meals. Don't be afraid to eat fat. People need fat in their diet. I would never say don't drink alcohol or don't have a doughnut—just do everything in moderation.

The biggest mistake people make is giving up too soon. Becoming fit is a lifelong thing. You're creating the body you want, and it takes time to do it.

Parul Patel: Master trainer and physical therapist, nine months

My philosophy is don't beat yourself up. Doing something is better than doing nothing, and positive reinforcement is better for the mind and soul. Always give yourself a pat on the back.

Progress motivates people, like seeing your abs get tighter or your kicks get higher. People start off too gung-ho with too-high expectations. People with New Year's resolutions say they're going to exercise five times a week and then feel bad when they don't make it. Start off small. Don't go all-out right away. Begin at a moderate level, two to three times a week. When you don't achieve goals, it's disappointing. But it's not the all-or-nothing principle. It's finding a balance of exercising and leading the rest of your life.

WELLBRIDGE HEALTH AND FITNESS CENTER

Kristin Nelson: Personal trainer and Pilates instructor/athletic director, five and a half years

Set short, attainable goals that you're going to see results from within two months. If you're unsure about an attainable goal, consult a professional.

Sign up for an event, like a marathon, swim-a-thon, or a triathlon. If you've never run, don't say, "I want to run a marathon in five months." Sign up for a 5K. That big goal can be your ultimate goal, but you need to set smaller goals to get there. Tell your goals to people who are going to cheer you on.

Try a new activity that matches your personality. If you like to dance, check to see if there's a hip-hop or salsa class. If you like intensity, look for a boot-camp class. And if your goal is weight loss, don't reward yourself with cupcakes. Get a new outfit or something not food-related.

Damian Dow: Exercise physiologist and personal trainer, nine years

I've used a fitness contract with clients. I have them sign a contract that I draw up, and they have to do it. Mental well-being is mostly the reward. Schedule a time each day to do the exercises, just like a meeting. Get in, get your business done, and have the rest of the day to yourself.

One of the things a lot of people neglect is meeting with a personal trainer even one time just to rekindle the interest in different exercises. Take a fitness test based on your goals. See where you are now and where you want to go. If people score below-average on the test, they like to improve. It doesn't necessarily mean going to the gym; you can just go home and go for a run or a walk. People don't always look at the big picture when it comes to exercise. They want instant success. You have to do the time to see the benefits.

I have a five-minute rule with most of my clients: If you're not motivated for that day, jump on a piece of equipment and see how you feel after five minutes. Most people are locked in by then. Or go out and buy a new pair of exercise shoes, outfit or shorts. Sometimes that motivates people because they're excited to wear their new gear.

Baron Baptiste: Owner, Baptiste Power Yoga; yoga instructor, 20 years

When we're not taking care of ourselves, we're not feeling good about ourselves. People often feel shame about it. It is important to remember the pain of not taking care of yourself. Usually the time you don't feel like exercising counts the most and very often becomes your best workout. Sometimes we encounter resistance [to doing exercise], but we can't let the resistance get out of control. If we give in to it, it just starts a downward spiral. We can't let resistance and our feelings guide us; there has to be a higher purpose. That's become part of my value system. I have a "true north" that I follow. I have to stay committed to doing things to stay healthy. It could be hiking, going to the gym, being disciplined with the foods that I eat. It's OK to splurge as long as I come back to the healthy track. You have to want to make it a part of your life—health, fitness and a sound mind. If you're really committed at that level, even if you fall off the wagon, you'll come back to the right path.

BODY SCAPES

1 Huntington Ave., Boston; 617-267-5766

Mitch Shechtman: Director of fitness operations, six years; personal trainer, eight years

The main thing I try to get clients to do is to stick to an exercise program. It's challenging, so you try to give them the tools to adhere to it all year round. For example, pack a gym bag. Keep it in the car or by the door so you don't have an excuse. Also, buy specific workout clothes. Sometimes people feel that if they've spent the money, they should use them.

If you're used to driving to work, park a mile away. It's a way to get yourself that extra 10 minutes to and from work to get a walk in, at the very least. If you're at the office, use stairs instead of the elevator. Those are good ways to increase your caloric expenditure throughout the day.

You've also got to keep it fun. If you're always looking at exercise as a burden you're probably not going to stick to it. Get a schedule you can stick with. Don't just blow it off—"I'll do it the next day, the next day"— pretty soon it's a week or a month, and then you're off the program. If you get someone who has stuck with a program for five or six months, they've really changed their lifestyle. The old way is out of their life.

BOSTON BODY

6 Newbury St., Boston; 617-262-3333

Zayna Gold: Founder, owner and director of Boston Body; personal trainer, 15 years

Growing up, I was a really lazy couch potato, always struggling to keep my weight down. I wasn't born with a fit body, and I really had a hard time disciplining myself. I would do nothing for months; there was no consistency. I changed when I started taking Pilates. It really made sense to me. If you want a real tip, it's not about discipline, it's about finding what you love. It's hard to stay disciplined with all the distractions in life. The first step might be going out salsa dancing every Friday night, walking the dog or taking power yoga. For me, it's Pilates and fitness. I'm so committed, not because of a discipline to change my body, but because I love it. IB

TIPS ON SOCIALIZING AS YOU SWEAT

BY JULIE SHORT

The only reason we go to the gym is to work out, right? Sure it is...at least that's what we tell ourselves. But if hard-pressed, most single guys and gals would admit to occasionally sneaking a peek at the buff bodybuilder on the bench or the lithe lady at the leg press. Hey, we're only human. There's just something about sweaty, half-clothed bodies in a warm, enclosed environment that fuels the imagination.

Just look at Sex and the City's resident attorney-cum-spinning-addict, Miranda Hobbes, who snagged a date with a guy she swift-kicked in the head during a kick-boxing class. It happens (and not just on TV), and it's about time it happened to you. We set off to gyms around the city to solicit tips from both men and women on the best way to score a date at the gym.

TUESDAY, WEDNESDAY... HAPPY DAYS

Head to the gym at 6 o'clock on a weeknight, and you're likely to face long lines at the machines and crowded classes—not exactly ideal conditions for working out, but perfect for meeting fellow fitness nuts. Carrie, 26, says that Mondays through Wednesdays are best. "Thursday night is out because of Must-See TV. Friday either is date night or you go out for drinks after work. On Saturday morning, you're recovering from the night before—you might go to the gym later in the day, but probably not," she says definitively. "Sundays aren't bad, but between 12 and 7pm, men are watching football, and women are either exercising or shopping." Kelly, 23, agrees. "The kind of men I'd want to date should be out at bars on Thursday and Friday nights."

Men are divided: "I prefer weekends because I'm in less of a hurry," says Jon, 32. On the other hand, Ken, 34, says that he's not likely to make the trek from his apartment in Brookline to the gym in the Financial District on weekends. "I like to go after work," he says.

All agree that it's better when the gym is crowded. "The options are plentiful, and fewer people are paying attention as you try to meet people," says Kim, 29.

WHERE THE BOYS ARE

Let's face it: Men are in the minority when it comes to fitness classes. "The only reason to take a class," says George, 23, "is to meet a girl." Caryn, 28, agrees. "If a guy wants to meet women, he'll take yoga or spinning. But then again, if he did, I might think he was batting for the other team."

Most guys we talked to say the best way for women to meet a guy is to hang around the free weights or the cardio machines—although they caution that it's a bit difficult to start up a conversation when you're out of breath. Jon, 29, prefers the stationary bicycles: "You can still talk and pedal." Several women agree, adding that the elliptical machines are another good option.

Angie, 25, met her current boyfriend as she was bench-pressing. "I needed someone to spot for me," she says. Josie, 27, had a similar situation: "I was between machines in the free-weight section when [my boyfriend] and I met." But she advises others: "Don't cater your workout to what another person is doing. You'll cross paths sooner or later."

YOU HAD ME AT HELLO

Men and women are mixed on how they'd like to be approached. "I'd rather initiate conversation. Otherwise, my first reaction is always, 'Ew, why is this guy hitting on me?' " says Carolina, 32. Instead, try for low-key, natural conversation. "I usually just say 'hi,' " says Jon. "What's the worst that can happen? If she gives you back one-word answers, you move on." If you're on the elliptical, discuss what's on the TV in front of you. Or if you frequently see the same person at the gym, introduce yourself. Better yet, "If she misses a day or two, approach her and say, 'I see you here all the time, but I noticed you haven't been here for a little while,' " says Jon. Chances are, the woman will be flattered you noticed.

Once you've made a connection, don't try to get her number after talking to her for only a few minutes. "Establish a friendly relationship over a period of several weeks," says Josie. "That way you can find out if she has a significant other or what her interests might be."

For men, a word of caution: Don't use the same pickup lines that you'd use at a bar. "If a guy says, 'Do you come here often?' all that means to me is that he doesn't go to the gym regularly. It's a major turnoff," says Josie. "Instead, I'd ask, 'Are you on this machine?' or 'How many sets do you have left?' "

Men love the idea of women approaching them. "Ask him if he wants a spot," says George. Most of the men we talked to say they would appreciate any overture from a woman. "Heck, she could say 'Your shoe's untied,' and I'd be hers," says Todd, 28.

Gary, 34, has a suggestion for men. "If a woman is using the elliptical, for example, and she looks confused or is using it wrong, it's easy to approach and ask if you can help." But Sarah, 24, demurs. "I hate it when guys try to correct me when I'm working out on one of the machines." Our advice is to proceed cautiously. If you meet with any resistance, back off and try a different approach later.

WORKOUT BARBIE

When it comes to looking good at the gym, both men and women are clear: No makeup. Period. "I don't like women who get dolled up to go to the gym," says Gary. Jon says that he expects women to look like they're at the gym to work out. However, he adds, "That doesn't mean dirty old sweats."

Hmm, no makeup, no sweats. What should women take away from this mixed message? Josie suggests, "Just don't plan to wear anything special. Be normal. People who over-coordinate their outfits at the gym look lame." Angie adds, "Wear clothes that complement your figure but are comfortable." (See "Fit and Fabulous" on page 31 for fashion tips.)

Women, take heart: "There's nothing sexier than a woman who's just run five miles on the treadmill," says Steve, 35. Amen!

THE WARM-DOWN

There you have it. Words of wisdom from gym rats themselves. Before we send you off on your own, keep in mind the following advice from a veteran of gym dating (a real pro who's met three out of her last four boyfriends at the gym): "Remember why you're at the gym: to work out. It's a nice place to meet people, but if you don't go about it in the right way, it's just like a meat market at any bar," says Cyndi, 26. Now go forth and conquer. IB

PEARLS BEFORE PEARL HARBOR

Between The Wars—an appealing CD featuring Cambridge-based cabaret performer Bobbi Carrey on vocals, Tomi Hayashi on piano and John Clark on soprano and tenor saxes and clarinet—covers the luscious songs composed between 1918 and 1941. Available online at www.bobbicarrey.com or at Amazon.

Put on this CD and roam around your house, and you'll find a certain daydreamy feeling blossoming. One of the cozy virtues of cabaret is the way it blurs the lines between romance, sadness and humor. When Carrey comes in, hauntingly, on the somber "I'll Be Seeing You," the melancholy is evident—even figuratively with the swirling dress on the CD cover moving in slow motion. The songs recall that precious time bracketed by the two world wars, sweeping across the fizzy twenties, then on through the down-swoop of the Depression and up again through recovery. Tunes include samples of the great American Songbook, from Oscar Hammerstein and Irving Berlin through the Gershwins and Johnny Mercer. Al Jolson's galloping ragtime piano in "Toot, Toot, Tootsie, Goodbye" sits alongside the throaty disillusion of "Falling in Love Again," which, in conjunction with "Just a Gigolo," spoofily suggests that we're all love's fools. There are moods of stouthearted bravado in the face of disaster ("I've Got Plenty of Nothing"), of longing (in the affectionately quotidian letter-song "P.S. I Love You"), rueful loneliness ("What'll I Do?") and sexual jealousy, jauntily explored ("How Many Times?"). These songs follow you around like a pink kitten.

GREECE IS THE SWEET WORD

Athan's is a Greek pastry shop and cafe at 1621 Beacon St. in Washington Square, Brookline (617-734-7028).

Athan's (no, not Nathan's) is a European pastry shop and cafe with delicate etched glass windows stretching around the corner, bringing light from Greece—or is it Brookline? This shop is an exact copy of a twin cafe in Greece. Despite globalism, the exotic European element still exists, delicious and refined. Accordingly, everything at Athan's is painstakingly made from scratch: real chocolate, real cream. Pastries, bigger than a cupcake and "each more excruciatingly gorgeous than the last" as one lover of sweets put it, are made of genoise, a mousselike, slightly spongy cake, sometimes covered with a luscious chocolate ganache. Trump indecision about a birthday cake by assembling a colorful, polyglot version: Get several small cakes (each suitable for one person)—Black Forest, apricot mousse, orange and marron. A chic little sliver of Belgian chocolate says Happy Birthday in gold lettering. (Alternatively, you can buy a whole cake.) Trays of baklava, famed Greek indulgence, with honeyed syrup oozing forth, come in "more variations than you can shake a stick at," says owner Ari. Athan's cookies, including almond and other clever nutty creations, are tantalizingly on the edge of sweet. Tinier longings can be satisfied with miniature petit fours.

WONDER WOMAN FOREVER!

Buckaroo's Mercantile at 1297 Cambridge St., Inman Square, Cambridge (617-492-4792 and at www.buckmerc.com) sells campy, nostalgic items from various decades. It's a Christmas bonanza!

Buckaroo's owner, Brooks, calls his merchandise "things I like." He likes the eternally comic, charming and optimistic imagery of decades past, roughly the '50s through '70s, often tinged with irony in retrospect. Hula girls become magnets, and a sparks-spitting "Nunzilla" sits side by side with things leopard-skin; eternal proliferations of Elvis; cowgirls cheeringly emblazoned on shirts, lamps, notebooks; and vivid, lurid pictures from pulp magazines where good girls go wonderfully bad. Wonder Woman, a Buckaroo fave, zooms across lamp shades, mouse pads and custom light-switch covers. Other covers feature robots, Mexican themes and the ever-colorful Rosie the Riveter. The innocence of the domestic '50s is preserved in dishcloths decorated with dancing tea kettles, a shiny black panther lamp holding little containers "for fake plants," and there's even a kitchenette banquette. A toy car made of tin battery covers with black-and-gold letters just proves it: Art is hidden everywhere. Buckaroo's offers endless entertaining tchotchkes that reminisce or comment lovingly or critically. Promoting ride-sharing during WWII, one ad creepily proclaims: "If you ride alone, you ride with Hitler." The sweeter "Can't sleep, the clowns will eat me" adorns various knicks and knacks.

Hidden Gem

First-rate food and reasonable prices make the Craigie Street Bistrot in Cambridge a real find.

BY J. CHARLES MOKRISKI • PHOTOGRAPHS BY MIKE MERGEN

When Butterfish closed its doors several months ago after a two-year run, I was saddened and disappointed. The splendid little boîte served well-conceived, professionally prepared and reasonably priced food. Upon closing the restaurant, former owner Christopher Bussell announced that he was forsaking the restaurant business for the field of education. His talents in the kitchen will be missed.

Almost without missing a beat, however, chef/owner Tony Maws opened the Craigie Street Bistrot in the same space. Fortunately, it continues the fine food and reasonable prices of its predecessor.

Maws has changed the color scheme from gray walls, cobalt-blue trim and turquoise upholstered banquettes to mellow mustard walls and maroon banquettes. Colorful framed posters from France and beyond have replaced black-and-white photographs of cityscapes. Tablecloths and napkins are still white, but as if to satisfy its bistro designation—and to save on laundry to boot—butcher paper covers the tablecloths.

Meals start with a stainless-steel basket (a carryover from Butterfish) of Iggy's bread: classic French baguettes, epines (loaves shaped like sheaves of wheat) and crusty rolls accompanied by softened butter. In one pleasant departure from standard restaurant practice, servers do not push pricey bottled water. Moreover, the wine list features remarkably inexpensive choices, with prices dipping to $14 and $15 a bottle for certain whites. On the red side, the 2000 Cote de Brouilly at $6 a glass ($25 a bottle), was a fruity and pleasant Beaujolais. An even better value was a large carafe (500 ml) of northern Rhone red, predominantly Sirah and Cabernet Franc, for only $13. Soft but well structured, it lacked the sometimes excessive pepperiness of many Côtes du Rhones.

The bistro's menu changes daily, although certain offerings reappeared on both of our visits. One of those was the pan-roasted mussels with toasted garlic, New Mexican Caribe (a type of chile) and fresh herbs ($10). Served in a large shallow bowl covered by an inverted bowl to keep the dish warm and serve as a receptacle for discarded shells, the mussels were impeccably clean, sweet and flavorful, with flecks of red chile and green parsley in a delicious, if borderline salty, broth.

Another repeat item on the menu was the terrine of foie gras with Verjus onions, sun-dried corn and Spanish paprika ($14). This fine, velvety, rich terrine is made on the premises from foie gras imported from New York state. Its reasonable price alone distinguished it from the foie gras at many competing establishments. Finally, but certainly not least among the first courses, was the potage Parmentier ($9), a warm leek-and-potato soup with poached oysters. Its light but intensely flavorful broth complemented and enhanced the succulent, briny oysters.

Main courses included black cod with French coco beans, chorizo and grilled fennel ($25). This wedge of fresh, boneless whitefish was accompanied by small, firm-textured white beans, numerous slices of mildly spicy Spanish sausage and mild grilled fennel. Small purple onions completed the ensemble, delightful in its combination of contrasting tastes and textures.

The roasted breast and confit thigh of chicken with creamy polenta and stewed dried plums ($19) required a 35-minute preparation time. It was well worth the wait. The moist, tender chicken breast and the rich, full flavor of the confit were complemented by a mound of pleasantly bitter chard, a dividend that the menu had not mentioned. Unfortunately, an overwrought presentation marred this delightful ensemble. Following the tiresome layering affectation all too common in Boston restaurants, in which meat or fish is routinely plopped on top of, rather than alongside of, accompanying starches, the chicken arrived on top of the polenta, with the chard hiding at the bottom of the heap. Fortunately, in this instance the compatible yet distinctive flavors and textures of the ingredients survived this treatment.

Not quite as successful was the red chile–marinated skirt steak ($21). This generous mound of rare, flavorful beef, sliced and arrayed around a large marrow bone, was accompanied by "forked" potatoes and roasted carrots. The potatoes were a toothsome cross between baked and mashed, and the carrots, reasonably resilient with a tender but not mushy texture, boasted a sweet, earthy flavor. The meat itself, however, was tougher than one would expect, even from a skirt steak, perhaps because of the way it had been sliced.

Desserts at Craigie Street were uniformly superb. Best, at least for chocoholics, was the chocolate mousse terrine ($9) with espresso ice cream and toasted almonds. This deep, dark, intensely chocolate mousse had a velvety texture and intense bittersweet chocolate flavor, with the added richness of chocolate sauce and a scoop of espresso ice cream, made in house, as are all of the bistro's ice creams. The crunch of the toasted almonds provided an enjoyable texture counterpoint. Lighter desserts, but no less well executed, were the port-poached Anjou pear with Oregon huckleberries (small blackish-purple berries with an intriguing flavor) and lemon verbena ice cream ($8), and the fresh market fruits crisp ($7), served with sweet canella ice cream. On the night we sampled the latter, the crisp featured blackberries and huckleberries, providing an enjoyably tart fruitiness to go with the sweet pastry.

Adding another option to its already reasonable prices, the bistro offers on weekday evenings a prix fixe dinner that includes appetizer, main course and dessert, for $29. (The same items ordered individually would've totaled $37.)

Service at Craigie Street was informed and generally efficient and professional. On my first visit, there seemed to be a large number of servers for such a small (50 seat) restaurant, and at times they seemed a hovering presence. On my most recent visit, in contrast, it took a considerable period of time to catch the attention of a server who seemed distracted and oblivious to my presence several minutes after I put the menu aside, folded my hands and waited to place my order.

All told, however, the Craigie Street Bistrot delivers incredible value. One hopes that its location in a parking-starved residential neighborhood not wholly convenient to the T will be overcome by its first-rate food and value-packed prices. iB

Out In the Cold, Ring In the New

Ch-ch-changes at 33 and Mistral... Bravo, Teatro!

BY CAROLYN FAYE FOX

Joshua Botsford, who recently replaced Charles Draghi as executive chef at 33 Restaurant & Lounge, will further refine the "symmetrical menu" of French and Italian cuisine.

He's been good—very, very good—for years now, but did that mean Santa Claus brought chef Charles Draghi a restaurant to call his very own? Of course not. Those of us who've followed Draghi's career path through the kitchens of Marcuccio's, Limbo and 33 Restaurant & Lounge know that he is not the kind of guy to sit on another man's lap and whisper his life's dream into the man's ear...and at this point, he's not the kind of guy who wants to work for someone else, either.

So as we enter a new year, Draghi has left 33, where he trained his chef de cuisine, Joshua Botsford, in the subtleties of the much-vaunted "symmetrical menu" of French and Italian cuisine. Botsford is now officially executive chef, and Draghi has no official plans...yet.

In Boston's theatre district, Paul Roiff and Jamie Mammano will be raising the curtain on Teatro any day now at 177 Tremont St. Taking center stage will be executive chef Robert Jean and his menu of Northern Italian dishes such as monkfish roasted on the bone with charred lemon and pepperoncini, and veal saltimbocca with creamed spinach and mushrooms. Set design is by Celeste Cooper of Repertoire. Just about 100 seats are available nightly in the dining room and at the bar, where a full menu will be served until 1am Monday through Saturday, and until midnight on Sunday.

Meanwhile, back at Mistral, new sommelier Dawn Lamendola intends to add smaller wine producers and build more value into the wine list. Lamendola's credentials are impressive, from her less-than-humble beginnings as sommelier at Tribeca's Montrachet to a stint as wine director and sommelier at Jean-Louis Palladin's Manhattan bistro. She's just completed the first level of the Court of Master Sommeliers examination, and is working toward Master Sommelier certification.

Where will the Perdix land? Chef/owner Tim Partridge closed his tiny restaurant (now Ten Tables) in Jamaica Plain to seek out a bigger nesting place. And he's reportedly found it in a richer demographic—near Coolidge Corner in Brookline. We'll keep you posted.

For a taste of firehouse chic, check out the newly opened Engine Seven Café at The Kendall boutique hotel near MIT. Inside the former fire engine bay of what used to be a fire station, and surrounded by kitschy firehouse memorabilia, you can take a seat and order breakfast until 11am and lunch until 3pm. The menu is simple—homemade scones, Caesar salads, BBQ pork sandwich—and the prices are reasonable (Sunday brunch buffet tops out at $18), so you won't get hosed.

Excelsior may be quite hot once it opens in the former Biba space, but the warm-up is taking longer than anticipated: The projected opening date for the forthcoming Tim Lynch/Lydia Shire co-production is now April.

And in sports-related food news: Where there's a Super Bowl, there's usually food that crosses the foul line: nachos made with Easy Cheese, onion-soup-mix dip, football-shaped meatloaf...you know the score. Yet there's also an event, unimaginatively dubbed Taste of the NFL, that showcases 32 accomplished chefs (one for each NFL team) who whip up the culinary equivalent of a touchdown to benefit child hunger relief organizations. Our local representative in San Diego on Jan. 25 will be Chris Schlesinger of East Coast Grill and Raw Bar, who will prepare black pepper-crusted New Bedford scallops with Macomber turnip puree and white truffle oil. Unfortunately, the Patriots won't be there—at least not on the playing field. iB

WINE

BY SANDY BLOCK MW

One of the major developments in California wine over the past few years has been a rising awareness of the flavor profile you can expect from grapes produced in specific sub-regions within the state. Although most consumers still buy bottles based on familiarity with the brand or company name, it often pays to note where the grapes originate if you want to pick a particular style of wine that closely fits your palate preferences.

To me, Sonoma County is fascinating largely because of the wide range of wines it produces. In contrast to the manicured estates of neighboring Napa, Sonoma's atmosphere has remained thoroughly agricultural. While a number of well-known large companies own vineyards throughout the county, the vast majority of Sonoma's nearly 150 wineries are small-scale artisan family businesses. In contrast to Napa, Sonoma's proximity to the moderating influence of the Pacific Ocean makes it a cooler climate region. The styles of wine that Sonoma produces reflect this, although temperatures vary dramatically depending on the exact location of the vineyards.

Within Sonoma there are several distinct legally demarcated zones, or AVAs (American Viticultural Areas), each of which has established its identity based on the specialized production of particular kinds of wine. When I'm scanning a wine list, I'll often make my selection based on a wine's origin, as this factor is such a heavy influence on the wine's flavor. Following is a rundown of some of Sonoma's major districts, and the kind of wine you can expect from each.

One of California's oldest grape-growing areas, Sonoma Valley is probably the county's most versatile region in terms of the grapes that ripen here, although red wine predominates. At the heart of Sonoma County, the region is famous for its sturdy cabernets, merlots and zinfandels, but the chillier parts of the valley floor, where fog is prevalent, yield a good bit of crisp, appley flavored chardonnay. Bottle prices in general are among the most moderate in Sonoma ($15 -$25).

Sonoma Mountain is a smaller part of the Sonoma Valley set apart by its altitude and climate, which is generally warmer as the vineyards lie above the fog line. The area's east-facing vineyards produce boldly flavored, herb-scented, very concentrated cabernets and zinfandels that cost more than those from the valley ($20-$30).

Russian River Valley comprises about a quarter of the county's vineyards and is predominantly a cooler, fog-influenced zone set in the hills that extend out to the ocean. It's best known for beautifully perfumed chardonnays and pinot noirs—wines of refinement, balance and grace rather than maximum flavor impact. Acidity levels tend to be among the highest here in comparison with most other California wines. Interestingly, some delicious, brightly fruity, medium-bodied zinfandel is also grown on the district's higher elevation vineyards. Russian River wines tend to run between $25 and $35.

Warmer and less foggy than Russian River, Dry Creek Valley also experiences more rainfall, the reason many of the vineyards are unirrigated. Rich, flavorful "old vine" zinfandel is the heart and soul of Dry Creek. The wines' brilliant red berry flavors, firm acidity, spiciness and soft textures set them apart from others made elsewhere in the state. ($20-$30).

The long, sunny summer days of Sonoma's largest viticultural area, Alexander Valley, ripen cabernet sauvignon, merlot and some chardonnay in a smooth, mellower style. The reds often have intense fruit and supple textures, while the chardonnays display lower than average acidity. Wines from this region are often the most expensive in the county (reds averaging $35-$45 and chardonnays $25-$30).

Carneros is the breezy, cool-climate area at the southern end of Sonoma that runs along the north shore of San Pablo Bay and is also partly in Napa County. This zone is trendy because of the high-profile chardonnay, pinot noir and sparkling wines produced here. These are very firmly acidic wines that are a bit less fleshy and ripe, but perhaps more elegant in style than most others produced in California. ($25-$40) iB

Performing Arts: Lullaby of Broadway

"An absolute knockout! From grand effects to minute detail, executed with savvy sensitivity. Prodigious sets, splendiferous costumes, caressing and coruscating lights and intoxicating configurations of dancers that defy our minds and muscles not to join in." So wrote John Simon of New York magazine about the revival of 42nd Street, which comes to the Wang Theatre this month. Clearly, this is the skewed view of a musical fanatic. If you're more skeptical about musicals (as we are), maybe this will help: The production won the 2001 Tony Award, the 2001 Drama Desk Award and the 2001 Outer Critics Circle Award, so it's got to be good, right? In addition to the title number—danced down a flight of steps—42nd Street features songs like "We're in the Money," "You're Getting to Be a Habit With Me," "Lullaby of Broadway" and "I Only Have Eyes for You." Have your toes started tapping yet? If so, get to this production about a chorus girl's rise to fame on Broadway. The Wang Theatre, 270 Tremont St., Boston (800-447-7400). Jan. 21-26. $28-$73.

SAT./JAN. 11

CityScope: Nanny Networking

We're always getting inundated with reader requests from single men asking for events that offer the possibility of... fraternizing... with swingin' single ladies. So when we came across an announcement for the Boston Area Nannies' holiday party at Jillian's, a light bulb went on. The party is open to all nannies—and nanny supporters—making this event tailor-made for you young men looking for a romantic, slightly maternal start to your new year. The party, which takes place at Jillian's Boston, includes a private VIP room with pool tables and a deli buffet. And if you strike out with the nannies, try the six bars in Jillian's mammoth complex. 145 Ipswich St., Boston (617-965-1674). 7-10pm. $30. www.bostonareanannies.com.

WED./JAN. 8

Sports: Shape Up!

Okay, folks, it's time to make good on your New Year's resolutions. Giving up the cigs should be easy—as of May, smoking will be banned in Boston bars anyway. And how difficult is it to stop spending hand-over-fist when you've already maxed out your credit cards on holiday gifts? With those resolutions in the bag, you can turn your full attention to the extra padding around your midsection with Boston's Favorite Workout. Wellbridge Athletic Club turns South Station into a giant exercise studio during lunchtime and right after work. Hundreds of harried men and women will take time to touch their toes, do sit-ups, reach for the sky and jump around under the instruction of a Wellbridge fitness guru. South Station, Boston (617-441-0800).12-2pm and 5-6:30pm.

SUN./JAN. 19

CityScope: Get Ready to Rumble!

If you can't smell what the Rock is cooking, then maybe this isn't the event for you. But anyone who worships Kurt Angle, Triple H and Scott Steiner and thinks the Rock is god should get pumped to see World Wrestling Entertainment's Royal Rumble at the FleetCenter. At this event, each of 30 WWE SuperStars is assigned a number (1-30) that determines the order in which he'll enter the ring. One wrestler joins the battle every 60 seconds and is eliminated when he is thrown from the ring. The last wrestler standing inside the squared circle wins and earns the right to compete for the WWE title at Wrestlemania. We're ready to rumble! FleetCenter, Boston (617-931-2000). www.fleetcenter.com. Jan. 19, 7:45pm. $25-$300.

See the lovely and demure Scott Steiner at WWE's Royal Rumble.

CityScope: Treasure Hunt

Hard-core antiquers in search of all things obsolete, outdated and vintage usually have to travel far and wide to find their relic of choice. But this week, Boston-based treasure hunters (as well as those of us who consider antiquing a hobby rather than a sport) need only drive about 20 minutes north to Wilmington for the Greater Boston Antiques Festival. The two- day show features hundreds of items (Victorian furniture, ephemera, estate items, china, folk art, vintage jewelry and the like) from more than 150 dealers. Casual collectors beware: This is the largest local antique show in years, so be prepared to bring out your competitive nature. Shriner's Auditorium (781-862-4039). www.ne antiqueshow.com. Sat., 10am-5pm and Sun., 10am-4pm. $6; early admission at 9am, $10.

FRI./JAN. 17-SUN./JAN. 19

Performing Arts: Let's Dance

Maybe it's Yuletide fallout—the bickering family members, the Christmas cookie overdose and lingering strains of sappy carols. Whatever the reason, you're in need of some quiet downtime—a break from the eating, drinking, talking, shopping and did we say eating? Time to sit back and take in a show. The Bill T. Jones/Arnie Zane Dance Company is best described as a fusion of dance and theater. The company teams up with the Chamber Music Society of Lincoln Center for three Boston performances—all of which feature the Boston premiere of Bill T. Jones' new works. The show is set to the music of Beethoven,Shostakovich and György Kurtág. The Shubert Theatre, 265 Tremont St., Boston (617-447-7400). Jan. 17-19. $25-$65. www.wangcenter.org.

TUE./JAN. 14

Tastings and Movies: Here's Eating With You

Attention Ingrid Bergman and Humphrey Bogart fans: You too can have a "date with fate in Casablanca." Argana, the Moroccan restaurant in Inman Square, hosts an affair to remembe in celebration of Casablanca's 60th anniversary. A special five course menu is offered durin the movie (with seatings at 6:30 and 8:30pm). Diners are encouraged to dress for the occasion, whether it be à la Bogie (don't forget the cigar) or a costume from the era. (Note: prizes are awarded for best costumes.) Argana bartender Sean Barney, who leads the event has created two new drinks for the occasion: the Casablanca Iced Tea and the Here's Lookin at You Kid. Argana, 1287 Cambridge St., Cambridge (617-868-1247). $50.

Tastings: A Noisy Noise Annoys an Oyster

Think surgeons have the best fine-motor-coordination skills? Try oyster shucking. "A skilled shucker can open an oyster in three seconds," says Max Harvey, seafood manager at Jasper White's Summer Shack. "For a beginner, it could take up to a minute." You'll be awed by the talent displayed at the Great Oyster Open at the Summer Shack. Shellfish shuckers from the East Coast Grill, Skipjack's, Legal Sea Foods, Turner Fisheries, McCormick & Schmick's and the Summer Shack compete for the title of "Best Shucker," showing off their proficiency in unique and theatrical ways—shucking behind their backs, blindfolded or one handed, for example. Watch the competition, feast on all-you-can-eat oysters and specialty dishes from all the participating restaurants, and drink Sam Adams lager to your heart's delight. Jasper White's Summer Shack, 149 Alewife Brook Pkway., Cambridge (617-520-9500). Jan. 13, 7pm. $35.

TUE./ JAN. 14-SUN./JAN. 19

Performing Arts: Hot Stuff

Fans of the outrageous '59 hit film Some Like It Hot will have no problem adapting to the stage version. The film's leads Marilyn Monroe and Jack Lemmon are, of course, not in this theatrical version, but the film's other star Tony Curtis—one of the most sprightly septuagenarians in show biz—has a leading role in the play. For those unfamiliar with this most outrageous comedy, the show revolves around two musicians who witness the St. Valentine's Day Massacre and hide out as members of an all-girl jazz band. Despite a lack of talent for impersonating women, their hoax is convincing—until they start getting hit on by men and falling for their female bandmembers, and the mob catches on to their scheme. The Wang Theatre, 270 Tremont St., Boston (800-447-7400). Tue., Thu.-Sat., 8pm; Wed. and Sun., 7pm; Sat. and Sun.,1pm. $28-$68.

FRI./JAN. 17-SUN./JAN. 26

Tastings: Food and Fun

Loosen your belts and prepare yourself for some major feasting this month, courtesy of Boston DineAround. Chefs at more than 40 local restaurants host cookbook authors from around the country to create memorable menus. Among the partnerships are Michael Romano, chef and author of The Union Square Cafe Cookbook, with Gordon Hamersley of Hamersley's Bistro creating a menu of seasonal American cuisine; and The Barbecue Bible author Steven Raichlen working with Todd English at Bonfire. To get up close and personal with some of the cookbook authors, stop by Barnes & Noble in the Prudential on Jan. 29, where some of the chefs will be signing copies of their books. Finally, for a taste of cuisine from all the restaurants participating in the DineAround, head to Le Meridien for an evening of live music and gourmet cuisine Jan. 20. Various restaurants throughout the city. For a schedule, visit www.BostonUSA.com/dinearound.

From the Balcony

Shakespeare & Co. takes on the life of Golda Meir

Immediately after Sept. 11, 2001, Israeli-born director Daniel Gidron reread the script to Golda's Balcony and found its theme surrounding the Arab-Israeli conflict timely. This 90-minute, one-woman production, now showing at the Tremont Theatre, focuses on Golda Meir, Israel's impassioned prime minister from 1969-1974, as she boldly defends the Jewish state amidst the bloodshed of the 1973 Yom Kippur War.

Meir, played by actress Annette Miller, faces a grave situation when Egyptian and Syrian armies launch a surprise attack on Israel, and the U.S. delays assistance. She must decide whether to deploy the state's nuclear arms.

The play, an hour-and-a-half monologue written by William Gibson, tells the story of Golda Meir's political struggle during the war, raising questions about power and idealism, says Gidron. It also reflects on the decisions Meir made, both personal and political, that led her to public office. "She grapples with her own personal sacrifice, her life as a mother and a wife and how her political career affected her relationships," Gidron says. Tremont Theatre, 276 Tremont Ave., Boston (617-708-8351). MBTA: Orange Line to New England Medical Center. Through Feb.22. $27-$38. —Sherene Azar

THE UNKNOWN COMIC

Confessions bangs Chuck Barris' gong

BY PAUL SHERMAN

Remember Chuck Barris, the obnoxious, clapping, tuxedo-clad host of The Gong Show, TV's talent show for the untalented? He seems like the last person you'd ever want to see a movie about. But think again, because Confessions of a Dangerous Mind, based on Barris' own unauthorized autobiography, is a wild, crazy little quilt of a movie.

Arriving at the tail end of a year in which films with unreliable narrators—such as Auto Focus and 24 Hour Party People—delivered some unusually interesting storytelling, Confessions might give us the most unreliable narrator yet. Barris' book isn't just about the Philadelphia native's career as a game show producer—he created both The Dating Game and The Newlywed Game. It isn't just about his life of sexual instability, and his on-again, off-again relationship with long-suffering lover Penny. It is also about how, between the meetings with network suits, the hours spent supervising game-show tapings and the one-night stands, Barris was also a hit man for the CIA. God Bless America—and God save her too.

That, more or less, is what the movie is about too. Like Barris, who's played with fitting nervous energy by Sam Rockwell (Galaxy Quest, Charlie's Angels), the movie is interestingly scattered. It darts between Barris' early days as a go-getter trying to break into showbiz (and writing Freddy Cannon's hit song, "Palisades Park"), his peak as a TV hit-maker and then star, his cloak-and-dagger overseas missions and his eventual bottoming out after he becomes burnt out on showbiz, spying and himself.

It's that absurd potion of elements that makes Confessions work. We know Barris gave us the romantic fluff of The Dating Game, but did he really get recruited by a CIA crew chief (George Clooney) and help assassinate a Latin-American radical in 1964, later sneak under the Berlin Wall to complete a mission and for years two-time Penny (Drew Barrymore) with a female spy (Julia Roberts)?

Inability to nail down Barris—to say what's true and what's not—is the fun of Confessions. In his directorial debut, Clooney embraces the stream-of-consciousness trip through Barris' looking glass and turns his story into a cut-and-paste kaleidoscope of 1960s and 1970s America. The movie throws drama, parody and lots of globe-trotting at us, set to off-kilter tunes by the likes of Esquivel, Yma Sumac and, at one point, a horrendous Gong Show Elvis impersonator. Like Barris' book, the movie is at its best an intoxicating, cinematic mix, one scene sometimes literally spilling into the next.

Clooney has a fitting ally at his side, screenwriter Charlie Kaufman (Adaptation). In Adaptation, Kaufman created a character who exists only in the protagonist's head; this time, Kaufman appears in scenes that may exist only in the head of another protagonist. To suggest the tenuous legitimacy of some events, Kaufman and Clooney treat them as parody. The CIA training melds Cold War paranoia with Barris' own paranoia, complete with firing range targets of Mao and Castro. Meanwhile, Barris' affair with fellow CIA agent Patricia (Roberts) features scenes that are like a burlesque of a 1940s spy movie, complete with trench coats, obvious wigs, poison pellets and switcheroos.

Confessions does stumble in a few places, where Clooney and Kaufman make questionable choices (though one embellishment of Barris' book, involving a dorky Dating Game winner, is inspired). Considering how the movie absurdly knots up truths, half-truths and perhaps untruths within the mind of Barris, the most obvious puzzler is why Clooney decided to include documentary interview cut-ins with such Barris colleagues as Dick Clark, Dating Game host Jim Lange and Gong Show regular The Unknown Comic. These cut-ins only pull us out of Barris' particular "reality" from time to time, the last thing we should be doing. We never know who or what the real Chuck Barris is, and that's a good thing. It's what makes Confessions such an entertaining head-scratcher. iB

Confessions of a Dangerous Mind ★★★

Directed by George Clooney. Written by Charlie Kaufman. With Sam Rockwell, Clooney, Drew Barrymore and Julia Roberts. Rated R. Miramax Films.

About Schmidt ★★★
Alexander Payne's latest doesn't have the satiri sting of his previous Citizen Ruth and Election, but i never tries to. Instead, it's a quietly disarming sto of a 66-year-old Omaha insurance executive (Jack Nicholson) who, when he's put out to pasture by hi company and his wife suddenly dies, discovers some thing he would have never admitted to himself be fore: that he doesn't like how his life turned out Nicholson thankfully leaves his mannerisms be hind, and the movie's bittersweet, b.s.-free tone i much more real than Nicholson's slightly similar sitcomlike As Good as It Gets. (At Boston Common Fenway and suburbs.)

Adaptation ★★★½
Another inspired mind-bender from the guys who made Being John Malkovich. This time, director Spike Jonze and writer Charlie Kaufman have made a movie loosely based on a book: a movie about making a movie based on a book. It follows Kaufman (a terrific Nicolas Cage) in his desperate struggle to turn Susan Orlean's The Orchid Thief into a screenplay, and comes up with the funniest, shrewdest peek into the creative process in years. Between Kaufman's hilariously low self-esteem, the imaginary twin brother (also Cage) who always one-ups him, his encounters with Orlean (Meryl Streep) and her encounters with the philosophical redneck (Chris Cooper) at the center of her book, this is absurd and inspired—right down to the "Hollywood ending" spoof resolution. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Antwone Fisher ★★★
The movie called Antwone Fisher was written by Antwone Fisher and tells the story of his emotional transformation—from rage-filled, much-abandoned orphan to relatively well-adjusted adult. Denzel Washington's directorial debut doesn't stray very far from the feel-good Good Will Hunting formula: Denzel plays a Navy shrink who, à la GWH, learns from his patient as he helps him work through his emotional baggage. But the movie's no-frills sincerity works, and newcomer Derek Luke has an endearing lack of polish. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Catch Me If You Can ★★★
Run, Leo, Run. DiCaprio plays a 1960s teen con man in a Steven Spielberg movie that, refreshingly, just tries to be brisk entertainment. DiCaprio's character turns to cons—bank fraud, impersonating an airline pilot and a doctor—after suffering the downward mobility of his family and the break-up of his parents (Christopher Walken, Nathalie Baye). His ill-gotten gains recompense for his dad's troubles with the IRS. So does leading FBI agent Tom Hanks on an amusing, years-long cat-and-mouse chase. In all-important movie semantics, this is inspired by a real story, not based on one, so it sometimes stretches credibility. It can also seem like the shallow version of The Talented Mr. Ripley. But it's an infectious ride, and amazingly, it has a John Williams score that isn't rehash. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Chicago ★★★
Life is still a cabaret in this movie based on a later Kander-Ebb musical. That's the whole premise of this spoof of Roaring Twenties Chicago, in which a singing star (and murderess), a star wannabe (and murderess) and a flashy lawyer (and defender of murderesses) all fight for the spotlight and the headlines. Renee Zellweger is the wannabe who discovers murder was a great career move; Catherine Zeta Jones is the singer trying to keep her name alive while in jail; and a surprisingly amusing Richard Gere is the upscale shyster with all the answers. All three know just how to manipulate truth, justice and the American way through performance. Sometimes the relationship between the production numbers and the plot is awkward—and 1943's nonmusical version of the same story, Roxie Hart, is funnier—but this still has lots of gusto and laughs. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Die Another Day ★★
A big disappointment, from what is easily the least of the Pierce Brosnan Bond films. Just about everything here is subpar for what you expect from a Bond film: It has one of the series' worst theme songs yet, surprisingly bland villains, underdeveloped female characters (no pun intended), wintry CGI effects that are worse than those in Extreme Ops (ouch), so-so gadgets and a plot that struggles to make you care—and fails. Korea, Hong Kong, Cuba and Iceland are Bond's ports of call this time, while Halle Berry's American agent and Rosamund Pike's fellow British agent are his shag buddies. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Far from Heaven ★★
Todd Haynes' drama lovingly re-creates the glossy world of Douglas Sirk, whose brilliant 1950s Technicolor melodramas, such as All That Heaven Allows meticulously presented post-war suburbia as a superficially rich yet emotionally stifled community. Haynes attempts to up the ante in Sirk's "women's pictures" by surrounding housewife Julianne Moore with a husband (Dennis Quaid) no longer able to deny his homosexuality and a potential interracial and class-crossing romance with a sensitive black gardener (Dennis Haysbert). But save for the overt mention of homosexuality, Sirk's critiques of narrowmindedness covered all of this ground before. So Haynes' movie veers on postmodern pointlessness; it's one step above Gus Van Sant's Psycho remake. (At Copley Place, Kendall Square and suburbs.)

Gangs of New York ★★
Daniel Day Lewis is the epitome of a charismatic villain in Martin Scorsese's long-awaited 19th-century story. With his swagger, sass and quick wit, this streetfighting, political wheeler-dealer makes you feel the lure of evil. So why is this epic still just a lot of sound and fury signifying nothing but production design and more production design? Maybe it's the familiar this-time-it's-personal plot with Leonardo DiCaprio as an Irish-American returning to the Lower East Side to wreak vengeance on Lewis, who killed his dad (Liam Neeson). Maybe it's the waste of using Cameron Diaz as the woman each man covets. Scorsese seems to pay more attention to minute historical detail than to the big picture, and the movie just sits there, unsure of what it's all about. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets ★½
I can't understand in the least why this series—a big-budget, overgrown equivalent of such disposable 1980s popcorn movies as Gremlins and Young Sherlock Holmes—is accorded such respect. Director Chris Columbus has always been a Spielberg-wannabe hack, John Williams is still recycling the same four chord progressions, and the sequel, like its predecessor, is so intent on cramming in every corner of the book that little of its fantasy elements get a sufficient set-up, so most everything just seems arbitrary and meaningless. And the thing just won't end. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Lord of the Rings: The Two Towers ★½
A whole lotta Dungeons & Dragons mumbo-jumbo writ bombastically large. This series has had close to six hours to make me care about anything happening in it, and I still don't care a lick. Frodo can go bury the damn ring in the ground and go for a swim, for all I care. He, Gandalf and all the rest are back—including the addition of Miranda Otto (Love Serenade) and Brad Dourif (Child's Play) to the cast—but it's still as plodding and dull as the first film. Like the Harry Potter series, it crams in a lot, yet devotes little energy to making all those events meaningful. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Maid in Manhattan ★★
Can someone please find Jennifer Lopez a new agent? Maybe then we won't have to suffer through any more of her forgettable romantic comedies. This one's a Cinderella story in which she's a hotel maid for whom celebrity politician Ralph Fiennes falls. The pair set off as many sparks as two wet noodles, and the movie never met a cliche it didn't like. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Narc ★★
Writer-director Joe Carnahan's thriller starts as a stylish, lean police story in which disgraced undercover cop Jason Patric is asked back to the force to help high-strung detective Ray Liotta find the killer of another undercover narcotics cop. But instead of coming together coherently and dramatically, such elements as the undercover cop's frazzled mental state, the high-strung detective's brutality and the facts of the murder case just fizzle apart. And in its attempt to upend our perspective on one of the main characters, the ending sports a very dubious morality. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

The Pianist ★★★
It's the little moments in Roman Polanski's Holocaust drama that make it work, like when a hungry family of six on their way to a concentration camp matter-of-factly carve up and share a small piece of candy. Based on the memoirs of late Polish musician and Holocaust survivor Wladyslaw Szpilman, played here by Adrien Brody, the movie powerfully shows the gradual whittling away of Polish Jews' human rights (and humanity) once the Nazis invaded in 1939. It also details how the title character managed to stay alive, through being stripped of rights and crammed into the Warsaw ghetto, seeing his family deported to concentration camps, and hiding out for months at a time while locked into apartments the Nazis think are empty. For better or worse, the hero is a passive character who says little; but his path through history is involving. (At Copley Place, Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and West Newton.)

Solaris ★★★
If Steven Soderbergh is going to make an artsy movie, better this sparse, enigmatic story than the endlessly self-referential Full Frontal. Think of his remake of the Soviet film 2001 as a futuristic, post-Memento mind-bender, with George Clooney as a psychiatrist sent to a space station where the crew has been physically and emotionally frazzled by the appearance of metaphysical visitors. Once there, the shrink is beset by his own visitor, his dead wife (Natascha McElhone). But is she his wife, his memory of his wife or a malevolent being sent in his wife's form? Not everything here makes literal sense—hello, ending—but the movie has an easy and eerie flow, thanks also to Clooney's body language, Cliff Martinez's music and Soderbergh's own cinematography. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Talk to Her ★★
Long after Pedro Almodovar was the hot European director, the Spaniard's movies remain interesting yet less involving. As usual, his latest has saturated colors and saturated emotions. It centers around two men involved in relationships with women who are comatose: a male nurse (Javier Camara) infatuated with his patient (Leonor Waitling), and a writer (Dario Grandinetti) whose matador lover (Rosario Flores) has been gored by a bull. If Almodovar hopes to wring pathos out of the nearly-asexual nurse's love for his patient, he fails. He also fails to convince you that the journalist would become a loyal ally of the nurse, especially when the nurse's "love" turns extreme. (At Kendall Square and Coolidge Corner.)

The 25th Floor ★★
There are some interesting elements to Spike Lee's latest—including Edward Norton's protagonist and the setting of a post-9/11 wounded New York City—but the story never really comes together. Norton plays a drug dealer sorting out his life before he starts serving a prison sentence, and those around him include girlfriend Rosario Dawson, buddies Barry Pepper and Philip Seymour Hoffman and dad Brian Cox. The relationships among the characters just aren't that convincing—the buddies don't feel like buddies, the lovers don't feel like lovers—though occasionally the film breaks into lively sequences, including a misanthropic Norton rant that's a worthy predecessor to the one in Lee's Do the Right Thing. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Renee Zellwegger discovers that murder is a great career move in Chicago, the movie that has swept this year's Golden Globe nominations.

TOTAL ECLIPSE

Boston-launched Moonraker explores the brave new world of live electronica with a touch of soul. BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

As a youth in northern California, Kelli Scarr would sit in a circle with her Lutheran church-choir friends and make up melodic mantras around "shalom," the Hebrew word for peace.

Today, "Shalom" has also become one of the most popular tunes by Moonraker, Scarr's "live electronic soul" band, formed three years ago in Boston and now based in Brooklyn, N.Y.

"It's such a great word," says Scarr, who wrote the song's lyrics about being separated from a boyfriend leaving town. "It's kind of all-encompassing: It means 'hello,' 'goodbye' and 'peace…' So it was like 'Shalom, until we meet again.' But it turned into something totally different for me."

Scarr's musical life has also taken on new meanings in the years since she sang in church. "This gift of music is totally beyond me," Scarr says by phone from Folsom, Calif., where in the late '90s she sang in her high-school jazz choir, a powerhouse ensemble that toured both the U.S. and Europe. "It's like I'm being used as a toller, as a voice for something way greater."

Coming to Boston on a Berklee College of Music scholarship, Scarr landed in Moonraker after auditioning with guitarist David Moltz, bassist Kody Akhavi and drummer Dan Mintzer, a trio of Boston University students. They wanted a singer to build on their hip-hop, funk and groove-based compositions, and spin electronica-styled moods with live instruments.

"They put up a sign of what music they were heading toward: Portishead, Radiohead, Bjork, Aphex Twin, Squarepusher. It was weird too because the whole time I was at Berklee, I was just singing jazz," Scarr says. "I had never seen that much electronic stuff."

As a singer, Scarr nonetheless provided definite shades of Bjork (especially with her pixielike stage presence) and Portishead's Beth Gibbons, yet added more of a soulful bent.

"I can get intense vocally and so can Bjork: she can scream and she can be quiet and [express] all these emotions, and I'm a very emotional person and musician," says Scarr. Regarding the soul element in her voice, she adds, "I listen to a lot of neo-soul and older stuff like Motown and Stevie Wonder, and before I got into the band, I listened to a lot of jazz singers."

Scarr also introduced the group to keyboardist Dan "Shaolun" Chen and turntablist Nate Greenberg, who has since left the band but continues to produce its CDs. First, in 2001, came Nada Brahma, which refined Moonraker's trip-hop and drum 'n' bass aspirations and introduced "Shalom" to a growing fan-base around Boston. The more electronic Moonraker EP delved into up-tempo remixes, while the just released Breathe… Live 2002 is a document of the band's stripped-down stage approach.

Moonraker is back in the studio this month before a Jan. 31 date at Bill's Bar, and Scarr says, "We're going to try to do the whole thing pretty much live, doing some production, but keeping the raw sound.… It's totally growing, and right now, it's going into more of an intense, urgent sound."

"We're getting into the improvisational element and feeding off the energy of the people who are at the shows," says the 21-year-old singer, noting the range of experiences they had on a recent tour that bridged the club and jam-band crowds.

"Every night was completely different, and it was all great," she says. "We played at this small place in Great Barrington called Club Helsinki, like a sit-down bar, and everyone was super. They were really vocal but sitting in chairs. The next night, we played in Toronto, where there were a couple hundred people dancing and sweating and screaming, and the next night, we were in Hartford in a huge auditorium. There were only a few people there, so we just brought them up and they sat onstage with us while we played. If we had one crowd, it would get boring."

The same might be said for Moonraker's all-encompassing music, which Scarr talks about with a sense of purpose.

"I think a lot of people are sad inside, because they feel alone and overwhelmed by problems that we're faced with," she says. "I hope that people are inspired, and I know they are, that we're doing the right thing. And I think it helps a lot as well that we're a female-fronted band. For women in particular, they come and see that I'm a strong female role model, and take a lot from that. It just means so much to me that other women can be inspired by what I'm doing." iB

The Peabody Essex Museum in Salem will transform a city street into its central courtyard.

The Peabody Essex Museum joins the 21st century with a $125 million face lift

On Feb. 18, the oldest continuously operating museum in the country will close its galleries to complete a much-needed and much-anticipated make over. The Peabody Essex Museum's collection outgrew its space in seaside Salem long ago. With 2.4 million pieces, the museum has never shown the vast majority of its art collection. Adding 100,000 square feet, it's finally making room to display what it has accumulated since 1799—and it's taking over one of the city's streets to do so. The street will become the museum's central courtyard.

When this North Shore gem reopens June 21, 90 percent of the museum's exhibits will be reinstalled, and its complex will feature six new galleries, several gardens and a memorial park celebrating the birthplace of the volunteer militia. Most important, it will have the space to properly showcase its world-renowned collections, such as those on Asian export, contemporary Native American and post-colonial Indian art.

After seven years of planning and $125 million in fundraising, the museum that began in the 18th century will be brought into the 21st century. Technological advances include new facilities—an interactive family center, a state-of-the-art auditorium—and new tools such as audio guides to the collections that will allow visitors to bookmark specific pieces and later retrieve more information on those items: videos, music, interviews with curators. They can download the information at the museum or have it e-mailed to them. "You can come and create your own experience," says Dan Monroe, museum director and CEO.

To its collection of historic houses, the museum is adding an 18th-century Chinese house from a remote village 250 miles southwest of Shanghai. Eight generations of the Huang family called the Yin Yu Tang house home, and the museum will fully reconstruct it with all the furnishings.

While it completes construction, the Peabody Essex will continue to run lectures, concerts, films and the Phillips Library. Peabody Essex Museum, East India Square, Salem (978-745-9500). www.pem.org. Tue.-Sat., 10am-5pm; Sun., 12-5pm. $5.

Improper Impersonals

If everyone kept their feelings bottled up like warm beer, we'd soon have antisocial behavior exploding all over the place and ruining the upholstery. So send us your letters of love and spleen, and we'll print them for the world to see (Impersonals may be edited for taste, space and clarity). Heck, it's better than making a fool of yourself in person. And IT'S FREE! Pick up a pen or keyboard (hint: we like the fact that we don't have to type up e-mailed messages) and write to:

Ri Rah

November 23, An Tua Nua (RiRa's) on Beacon St. You: very tall guy, wearing an off-white sweater with some sort of small green design on the front and a button-down shirt underneath. At one point, you took off both to reveal a black T-shirt. You must have sweat off about 10 pounds in all those clothes. You kept hanging out by the back bathrooms near the DJ for some reason, which I later figured was a great place to check out the crowd. Me: Girl with dark brown hair with red streaks in it, wearing a black patterned shirt and black pants. We walked by each other at so many points during the night and I wanted to compliment you on your crazy, curly brown hair but held back. I'd like to buy you a drink sometime... at a different bar.

Turkey Trotter

Thanksgiving morning in Somerville, postrace. You were wearing a yellow and black windbreaker and having coffee in Dunkin' Donuts with a man, woman and cute toddler in a puffy snowsuit. I was at a nearby table with two fellow female runners. We exchanged several long glances. I'd love to hear from you to discover if we're running at the same pace.

Yet Another Note on "T" Etiquette

This letter is directed to the guy who was talking very loudly on the D-Line last Nov. 20 about having quit his job as a physician because he wasn't paid enough! You evidently have some job in health care management that pays so much that the $200K+ salary you had before looks like peanuts. In fact, you loudly stated that you'd have to take a 60 percent cut in pay if you were to return to your previous occupation. Do you have any idea what that sounds like? I'm sure I'm not the only person who's actually unemployed (laid off because the company for which I worked had financial problems) and will never make that kind of money even if I find another job. It was evident that the woman with whom you were holding the conversation, who seemed to be a friend of your parents, was not impressed by your attitude, either. My point is, I really don't care that you're egocentric, immature, and clearly oblivious to the financial status of most of the world, but I do care that you're interfering with my right to read or nap or whatever on the train ride home (from my pathetically paying temp job!). So please, keep it down next time!
—Thanks!

Red Hot Tamale

I saw you driving onto the highway, cruising down Soldiers Field Road in your blue Cabrio. Your hair, under your Red Sox hat, framed your perfect face, and as you danced alone to your music, I fell in love. Marry me, you red-haired vixen...

Let's Make the Third Time a Charm

The first time I saw you, I was jogging through the Public Gardens this spring. You sat in the shade, underneath a tree, reading a Herald. You have brown hair and dark brown, intent eyes. I stopped my run and pretended to stretch out momentarily and watched your cute smile form on your face when you read something funny. You recognized a passerby, and she called you "Vinny." I realized I had stopped running, didn't want to look obvious or foolish so I continued. Months later, as fate would hopefully have it, I bumped into you again, this time at Emily's. I had kicked myself about not approaching you that day in the park and this time, I took a grand approach. I was the nervous blonde that spilled some of my drink on you when we bumped into each other. To my surprise, you weren't mad but smirked and were very polite about the whole thing. Did we have a moment, while we stood there, face to face in smiling silence? I blinked and you were gone with a pack of friends....We should met for coffee and I promise, I'll offer more than a nervous grin this time.

To My Punk Rock Girlfriend

We met one night in July at the BHB. My world was flipped upside down for the better. I could not be any happier and I thank you for it. I am the luckiest man on Earth.

There We Were

Packed in like cattle on the C train going into Boston. 8:30am. Rush hour. The "Ba Humbug" feeling of people. There I was, carrying my large bag and immobile amongst everyone, without access to something to hold on to. Each stop was a struggle. When standing in the middle of the train, with nothing to hold on to, I tried to ride with the velocity of the train. Today was not that easy. You were standing right next to me trying to avoid all eye contact with everyone because it was too close for comfort during that ride. Someone had the audacity to push through the crowd toward me as the train was moving; we were at a crossroads. It was like playing chicken. Who was going to win this battle? The train was coming to a stop, slow and strong. I lost my balance trying to step aside. In essence, I lost the chicken fight. I then exclaimed for you to help me stay standing or I was going to fall all over the train. You grabbed my jacket, I think, and I clutched onto your coat with a near death grip. You never said a word but laughed when I exclaimed, "I didn't want to be that person on a train....geesh!" I want to say thank you for letting me grab on to your coat before I fell on my keister. You helped by reaching out to me and I appreciated that. Thanks.

Shy Guy

I think you know I would like to go on a date with you and that's why I haven't seen you around Charlestown anymore. No need to be shy. You: 5'8", blond and rugged, Lowell area home base, and the manifestation of all my dirty thoughts... Me: 5'6" brick house, brunette, professional, looking to ea you alive and meet up with you aga perhaps across from the Museum o Science or at your work site? Or at my job? We have gone out socially once, and you were so outrageous and social, I need to find out more about you and your interesting worl of cars. Given the chance, I can and will rock your world.

Jingle Mingle

We shared a Sam Adams and 10 minutes of conversation before yo left with your friends. We spoke of Providence, waterfire, my discontentment, your move to Brookline. I watched you walk awa and you never looked back. I wish I had done something other than stand there. Can we talk again?

I Wonder(bar)

Do you remember me? I was on a bad blind date on Dec. 7 and you waited our table between the bar and computer. I waited to talk to y but never did. I've been back since but had no luck. I've often thought of the way I made you laugh and m my date, the way your blue eyes lit up. Maybe if you're not married or a foreign country buying another b silver necklace we could spend another dinner together, just the t of us this time. What do you think

Rockie Horoscope

JANUARY 8 – 21, 2003

BY ROCKIE GARDINER

CAPRICORN DECEMBER 22-JANUARY 20

There will be a major change as Saturn shifts methodology and mood when it enters Cancer in June. Crab-ville is not the best sign for your ruling planet to operate out of, but it makes you much more understanding when dealing with allies and antagonists alike. Lucky Jupiter's move into Virgo is a blessing for all earth signs; Caps could inherit big time, travel, maybe go back to school. Take-action Mars is exceptionally effective while it's in exaltation in Capricorn during March and April; make your move this spring or postpone for two more years.

AQUARIUS

JANUARY 21-FEBRUARY 18

In March, your Uranus ruler moves on to Pisces then revisits Aquarius in September for the rest of 2003. You'll get a taste of what miracles Uranus can bring about when it's in the sign of faith, fakery and the Fish. Vaporous Neptune, ruler of Pisces, hovers between 10 and 13 degrees of Aquarius, making natives born on the January/February cusp (e.g., Dick Cheney) even harder to pin down, but artists and mystics thrive. Generous Jupiter leaves your Leo marriage house for discriminating Virgo in late August. Sorry.

PISCES

FEBRUARY 19-MARCH 19

Fish benefit from original Uranus, ruler of Aquarius, moving into Pisces in March while Neptune, ruler of Pisces, remains in Aquarius. Unpredictable Uranus in your sign will change things in ways few of us can imagine, unless your area of expertise is the years 1919-1927, the last time Uranus passed through Pisces. Partnership matters get a big boost in late summer as prosperous Jupiter enters Virgo. Saturn in Cancer, an empathetic water sign, should stabilize your home life.

ARIES

MARCH 20-APRIL 19

Rams rule! It might take a few months to realize your elevated position, but that won't get in the way of your appointment with destiny. Your Mars ruler leaves clandestine Scorpio for spirited Sagittarius in mid-January. Valentine's Day weekend should be red-hot. Your role as CEO begins in early March when Mars enters pragmatic Capricorn, the sign in which it excels. Come Earth Day, Mars will be in Aquarius, offering advice. Then on Bloomsday, Mars (and you) launches a six-month voyage through artistic, inspirational Pisces.

TAURUS

APRIL 20-MAY 20

Your current romance might come undone today as your Venus ruler leaves Scorpio and sexy Mars behind. Venus in Sagittarius tends to spread the love around, variety being the spice of life. Venus in Capricorn, her star-idolizing, social-climbing incarnation, kicks in on Feb. 4, in time for the award shows. March is basically sociable, Venus in Aquarius time; the goddess is exalted in sympathetic Pisces through Easter. Venus gets to Taurus, her best (for you) position May 16, right after the total Taurus-Scorpio full moon eclipse you can watch live!

GEMINI

MAY 21-JUNE 20

Your Mercury ruler is retrograde until Jan. 22, so don't sweat the planet's reluctance to bring new action in the New Year. Other retrograde periods are April 26-May 20; Aug. 28-Sept. 20; Dec. 17-Jan. 6, 2004. Schedule vacations and visits to old friends for those dates. The good news is that Saturn leaves your sign in June, freeing you from the restrictions and obligations it has imposed during the last two years. August could be sizzling for Twins born in May; career changes, or maybe a move or a remodel are in store.

CANCER

JUNE 21-JULY 22

This year will be memorable. Saturn enters your sign in June, and it comes as close to the sun as its 29-year orbit takes it. There'll be challenges to the nation and the presidency: the last time Saturn was on the USA sun, Nixon resigned. In 1944, amid WWII, FDR died. Whether scandal or illness gets him, Bush (July 3) is at risk. But you, dear Crab, could rise to executive status or become an authentic grown-up during Saturn's visit. In March, innovative Uranus moves into Pisces; suddenly there are opportunities in art, aeronautics and aquaculture.

LEO

JULY 23-AUGUST 22

Unfortunately, protective Jupiter leaves Leo at the end of August; fortunately, it moves into your Virgo money house for the next 13 months. You do the math. Quirky Uranus exits your Aquarius marriage house in March; sexy Mars passes through from late April to mid-June; but idealistic, sometimes delusional, Neptune stays put. Relationships continue to be confusing. Valentine's Day could be very exciting—explosive too. Don't get mad, get even. Best time for sweet romance and favors: July 28-Aug. 22 when lovable Venus is in Leo.

VIRGO

AUGUST 23-SEPTEMBER 22

The Virgo new moon on Aug. 27 also marks the beginning of benevolent Jupiter's yearlong odyssey through your sign. Adding a genuine note of unpredictability, inventive, erotic Uranus will be in your Pisces marriage house for the next seven years. What's a Virgin to do? Check the Gemini forecast for dates when your Mercury ruler is retrograde and don't schedule a wedding or other major partnership doings for those periods. The summer solstice weekend in June also doesn't look good—way too much is happening in the heavens.

LIBRA

SEPTEMBER 23-OCTOBER 22

Where's the next Bill Clinton, an ambitious politico with Libra rising? That's who'll rise to the top, like cream, while Saturn is in your Cancer midheaven. But if you're not the executive type and don't want to shoulder more responsibility, find another forefront you can come to. The culinary arts would be a career with a nurturing, Cancerian slant. Or real estate. A relationship heats up while passionate Mars spends June-November in your house of romance, risk and recreation.

SCORPIO

OCTOBER 23-NOVEMBER 21

Some things change, some stay the same. Erratic Uranus stops upsetting your household after it moves out of fixed Aquarius into Pisces, a compatible water sign. Jupiter no longer presses your buttons once it switches from extravagant Leo to earth-friendly Virgo; however, it'll still provide opportunities to advance your career and reputation. Less glitz, more refinement. You're at your most potent, sexy beast best over the Feb. 14 weekend when both rulers, Mars and Pluto, merge. Plan accordingly.

SAGITTARIUS

NOVEMBER 22-DECEMBER 21

Archers dealing with the constraints of having Saturn in your Gemini house of partners get a break in June, when the old man finally moves on to Cancer. While it might not vacate your marriage house right away, you can more readily adjust to its obstacles. Your Jupiter ruler leaves fiery but friendly Leo for perfectionist Virgo in late August, a tempestuous time for everybody. Expansive Jupiter in your Virgo midheaven will provide opportunities to grow, excel, maybe even fall flat on your face. Hey, it's another learning experience.

NIGHTCRAWLING BOOKWORMS...

How many prominent young Bostonians can you fit into the library?

Apparently, all of them, judging by the turnout at Festival of Lights, a fund-raiser hosted by the Young Professionals of the Boston Public Library Foundation.

Spotted in the second floor reading room, cocktailing and nibbling hors d'ouevres while bidding in a silent auction of photographs relating to the library, were such young worthies as Jeremy Dellaria and his gorgeous girlfriend, Nancy Lee; real estate scion Tedd Saunders; celebrity yoga instructor Toby Levine and her insaniac brother, Andy; with the fabulous Deena Giancotti; Channel 5 hottie David Muir; preeminent portrait photographer Cheryl Richards; absurdly attractive couple Nicole and Jeff Bellows; foxy blond TV reporter Alisyn Camerota; pint-sized pistol Janet Wu; her co-chairs, Nicole and Ramsey Alsarraf and Russell Evans; and one woman who had a bit too much to drink and decided to kick her shoes across the room while library president Bernie Margolis looked on, unamused.

Otherwise, everyone behaved with perfect decorum, and it was a thoroughly enjoyable evening, the only criticism coming from one guest, who said, "I'd come to the library a lot more often if they served drinks here all the time."

LOVE ALL...

Brightly colored go-to-hell pants weren't exactly mandatory at the Sportsmen's Tennis Club's gala roast and tribute to legendary tennis commentator Bud Collins, although the guest of honor did sport a pair of his trademark eye-poppingly loud trousers.

Among the luminaries who gathered at the Seaport Hotel to fete Collins and raise money for the nonprofit tennis club: Collins' statuesque wife, Anita; tennis legends Billie Jean King, Zina Garrison and Pam Shriver; one-named author Touré; former New York mayor David Dinkins; 60 Minutes eminence grise Mike Wallace; Channel 2 chatelaine Emily Rooney; philanthropic cutie-pie Carol Fulp; Sovereign Bank smoothie Ron Walker; sports anchor Steve Burton; and numerous, equally glittery others.

Cocktails, hors d'ouevres and dinner were accompanied by music, a silent auction and a mock trial of Collins for such crimes as excessive niceness and violating the dress code. Needless to say, the evening's accessory of choice was the diamond tennis bracelet.

"You're not wearing yours?" one astonished guest asked a friend, to which the response was, "No, I thought that was a little too obvious, so I just opted for lots of diamonds and pearls."

LET'S DO THE TIME WARP AGAIN...

It's not often at a big-ticket charity gig that you walk into the men's room to find three guys in fishnet stockings lined up at the sink, but then again, the Big Night gala to benefit the Big Brother Association isn't your run-of-the-mill fund-raiser. The Rocky Horror–themed blowout, held at the Park Plaza Castle, featured a three-course feast concocted by celebrity chefs Ming Tsai, Jasper White, Michael Schlow and Seth Raynor, and a concert by iconic '70s act Meat Loaf, followed by sizzling '80s headliner Morris Day and the Time.

As specified on the invitation, the dress code was "drag optional, leather and fishnets preferred." Among the normally quite staid folks taking a walk on the wild side were Tudor Investments poobah and the party's co-chair Jim Pallota; Nutter, McLennen and Fish bigwig Joe Ayoub; ugliest drag queen alive Tim Reed and his extremely pregnant wife, Carole Crittenden; the equally pregnant Kelly Verrochi and her gazillionaire husband, Paul; his stunningly beautiful daughter, Marisa; ubiquitous party pair David and Nina Fialkow; bachelor-about-town Christian Stallkamp; entertainment mogul Richie Balsbaugh and his fashion plate other half, Maureen; the fantastically glamorous Bianca Latessa, and so on and so forth.

Proving that this party is nothing if not out-of-the-ordinary, a prominent young investment banker was overheard complaining to his wife, "I think I need some more lipstick," to which she replied, "Wait until after you eat, sweetie."

DEBS JUST WANNA HAVE FUN...

Anyone worried that Boston's Old Guard has become completely ossified need look no further than the Winter Ball to see that it hasn't.

The annual white-tie holiday hoedown, traditionally the domain of dewy young debutantes and prep-school alumnae of all ages, was held at the Park Plaza Hotel. Among the current crop of white-gloved girls coming out in the traditional (as opposed to the Rosie O'Donnell) sense were such exquisite young things as Blake Whitney, Hilary Minot and Lindsay Talbot, whose beaming mothers—Vicky, Gale and Michele, respectively—don't look old enough to have daughters who are out of diapers, let alone freshmen in college. Among the other attendees were such well-dressed and well-bred types as the party's organizer, Hope Baker; Beacon Hill grande dame Smoki Bacon and her royal consort, Dick Concannon; ubiquitous It-boy Krystian von Speidel and the luscious Chantelle Carpenter; brunette bombshell Julie Sprague; the affable Alex Cabot; sibling tag-team Deborah and Richard Babson; Haitian playboy Ferguson Heriveaux; the swanlike Rhys Gardiner and her sister, Elin Schrann, Elin's husband, Steve, and upper-crust Brit Andrew MacIlwraith with his delightful wife, Tish Robbins, to name a few.

"How are you?" someone asked an acquaintance, who responded, "Well, I'm still vertical." The evening's most drily amusing exchange, however, had to be the following:

"I love your cufflinks."

"Thanks. They're imperial Fabergé. I love your bracelet."

"Thanks. It's Medic Alert." iB

At the Winter Ball, clockwise from top: the debutantes; Lindsay and Michele Talbot; Hilary and Gale Minot.

FROM THE EDITOR

With 85 percent of THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN's staff being single, you could say we have a personal interest in our annual bachelor/bachelorette issue. This year, reviving an old IMPROPER tradition, we invited you, our readers, to join us in the search for Boston's most eligible singles. You responded with a flood of nominations—dazzlingly heartfelt endorsements of your friends, sisters, brothers and coworkers that renewed our faith in this town's supply of interesting, accomplished and charming bachelors and bachelorettes.

It was no small chore, though, to boil the nominees down to just 10 men and 10 women. We hope the final list of 20 that we present on pages 16-22, a mix of reader nominees and high-profile Bostonians living single life in the spotlight, will give all our unattached readers renewed enthusiasm for your singlehood and put the lie to the sentiment "all the best ones are taken."

Special thanks go to the bachelor and bachelorette who agreed to pose for this issue's cover—Kelly Malone of Mix 98.5's Lander in the Morning show and Lou Merloni of the Boston Red Sox. With patience and seemingly endless good humor, they withstood our posing and re-posing them as we sought the perfect image for this issue's cover. A note to both of their moms, who we hear will be hoarding copies of this issue: Nice work!

Stay tuned to these pages or consult our Web site (www.improper.com) for information on our follow-up party to celebrate our bachelors and bachelorettes and the single life in general.

To our married or otherwise spoken-for readers, this issue's got more than just

CRITIQUING THE CRITIC

Decisive proof that The Two Towers and Gangs of New York are among 2002's finest films: Paul Sherman's clueless two-stars-or-less review-blurbs of both. But then, what should we expect from someone who not only gets the name of Spike Lee's latest movie wrong (it's 25th Hour, Paul), but also refers, in his Solaris review, to "the Soviet film 2001"? One thing I'll say for Mr. Sherman's critical skills: They're at least fitting for a magazine that actually devotes precious wood pulp to articles about how to pick up dates at the gym.

—CHRIS PIERSON
Cambridge

Note: The Solaris mistake was an editing error, not a reporting mistake on Sherman's part.

MOUSSE-LEADING

This is in regard to Mopsy's review of Athan's Pastry Shop in the Jan 8 issue. There, a genoise is described as a "mousselike, slightly spongy cake." "Mousselike?" Definitely not. Indeed, a genoise is, of itself, a rather dry cake, usually brushed with a sugar syrup flavored with liqueur. A genoise is really a very simple cake with simple ingredients: normally ordinary wheat flour, a good number of eggs, a little butter, sugar and flavoring. That's it. It is also one of the most perfect cakes ever devised. It does not depend on the ground nuts, great quantities of butter or bittersweet chocolate, or mousse texture that seem to have become the current notion of what constitutes fine pastry.

NEW IN TOWN

Newsworthy

News adds a classy touch to Kneeland Street.

News, the swanky neighborhood restaurant/lounge that recently replaced the Blue Diner on Kneeland Street, may just be one of the best additions to the Boston scene in years.

First off, it's open weekdays until 4am, and weekends round the clock from 11am on Saturday to 4am Monday. Since its opening in late November, the 200-seat restaurant has been mobbed into the wee hours, says owner Jamie Giorgio. But unlike many other late-night haunts that dole out cold tea or pepperoni pies in a less-than-gorgeous setting, News is visually stunning, with exposed brick walls; giant windows that open onto the street; skylights; a smoothie bar; two cozy nooks outfitted with comfy leather couches, plants, flat-screen TVs; oriental rugs; brown leather booths; a long wooden bar; and decorative mirrors. Need we say more? Peruse the multipage menu of upscale comfort food and choose from breakfast items any hour of the day, plus gourmet salads, sandwiches and pasta dishes—even lobster (baked, stuffed or boiled). A sushi chef works the night shift, serving up all manner of rolls and nigiri.

News also lives up to its name by offering free newspapers, local magazines and wireless Internet, and tuning its five flat-screen TVs to CNN. The best touch of all, however, is the newsstand by the door, which sells everything from Playboy, Aleve and plastic combs to super glue, lottery tickets and cigars. 150 Kneeland St., Boston (617-426-NEWS).—Erin Hagedorn and Julie Short

Feeling Saintly

Saint spices up Sunday nights.

•Studio 54 Redux.... According to the folks at Saint, Sunday is no longer a day of rest. Since Jan. 19, the first day of the week promises to deliver a hedonistic romp reminiscent of Manhattan's infamous Studio 54. On New Year's Eve, Saint modeled itself after the famed Studio 54 and welcomed 2003 in retro style, with revelers in their best 1970s-style sequined jumpsuits. The night was such a success that co-owner Ritchie Balsbaugh's team has decided to make the Studio 54 theme a regular occurrence, though '70s regalia isn't a requirement for the Sunday night soirees. But the atmosphere will be spiced up with acts ranging from drag queens to fashion shows to retro performers. It might not be as crazy as Manhattan's sex-in-the-balcony/narcotics-in-the-basement days of yore, but it's definitely a more lively alternative to watching Sunday-night Sex In the City reruns in your pajamas. Doors open at 9pm, 21+, no cover.

•Runnin' Fridays at the Ecko Lounge are now branching out to include the 19-and-older crowd. Upstairs, the 2-Step UK Garage crew presents an "old-skool mashup rewind" Jan. 24, as well as a CD-release party for 4XL: The Sound of SoulChampion Jan. 31. Downstairs, the drum 'n' bass selectors also go classic Jan. 24, while special-guest DJs Superball and Trunks lay down the sounds of New York Jan. 31. 41 Essex St., Boston (617-417-0186).

•The sun, sand and carefree sounds of Brazil are coming to the Palace Entertainment Complex in Saugus; in mid-January, the space formerly known as Tilt was transformed into Rio. Featuring a Carnaval theme, Rio promises to bring some of that sultry South American flair to the North Shore. Doors open at 9pm; the cover charge is $20 for 18+, $15 for 21+ ($10 before 10pm for 21+).

•The Roxy kicked off its new Latin Fridays Jan. 17 with the Argentinian group El Símbolo. Rotating DJs promise to spin more Spanish pop (think Enrique Iglesias and Loona) and dance music, and will focus less on the salsa and merengue element found in most Latin venues. In addition to musica caliente, club-goers can expect weekly surprises, including fashion shows and live music. 10pm, $10, ladies 18+, guys, 21+.

SPORTS

Farewell to Will

Will McDonough, 1935-2003... It seems like ages since the IMPROPER BOSTONIAN chronicled the influential (and often controversial) views of sportswriter Will McDonough in its Aug. 27, 1997 issue. The cover story by then senior writer Scott Farmelant summed up McDonough's legendary career like this: "Will McDonough is unquestionably the city's hot-button sports authority. The public swears by him or at him." Those words remained true until Jan. 9, when McDonough passed away at his Hingham home. The late Globe scribe wasn't afraid to pick a fight—in fact, just this January he'd lambasted Red Sox CEO Larry Lucchino in his column. That take-no-prisoners approach earned him a few enemies—and a lot of respect—over the years. "The Globe used to be filled with guys like him," says former colleague John White, "guys who weren't afraid to piss people off." But in the end, anyone, not just any writer, would aspire to the kind of fame, money and self-assuredness that McDonough possessed. It's appropriate that his wake was held at the FleetCenter, because McDonough was one of the sporting world's biggest players. Our condolences to his family.

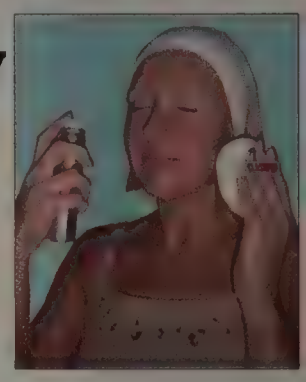
Spray Away



Recently, I hired a makeup artist named Ingrid (you can see her work in the fashion spread of this issue) for a photo shoot, and instead of using sponges to apply foundation, she pulled out an airbrush gun. The result was perfectly even-toned skin with light but flawless coverage. Since an airbrush compressor usually runs about $1,000 (and that doesn't include all the accessories that you need to make it work), I went in search of a more affordable alternative and found a spray-on foundation by Classified Cosmetics called Era Face. It comes out in a fine mist and works a lot like Ingrid's airbrush gun—and the result is natural and beautiful. The company was founded by celebrity makeup artist Yolanda Halston and her husband, Rodger Halston, in Malibu, Calif. (866-ERA-FACE). www.classifiedcosmetics.com. $55.—Samantha House

100 Bottles of Wine on the Wall... Finding a good selection of wine by the glass in this city can be a challenge. So we were impressed to learn that Fleming's Prime Steak House & Wine Bar offers 100 different glasses of wine on a biweekly rotation, ranging from $6.75 to $17 per glass. This month, the featured wine is Wildekrans 2000 Pinotage, a warm-bodied mix between a pinot noir and Cinsault from the South African vineyards of Walker Bay. $12.50 for a glass, $50 for a bottle. 217 Stuart St., Boston (617-292-0808).

Pie O'Mine... Good news for suburbanites: Campo de Fiori, the 5-year-old Italian bakery café in Harvard Square beloved for its signature Roman-style pizza, recently opened a second outpost in Weston Centre. 37 Centre St., Weston Centre (781-893-6135).

Bon Paris... Heads up for the newest crêpe restaurant. Paris Crêperie opened its second location in January on Beacon Hill. The new eatery is much larger than its flagship store in Coolidge Corner and touts a larger frozen yogurt selection. Look for a new addition to the crêpe menu: the MGH, with chicken, turkey and grilled onions and peppers. Bon appétit. 326 Cambridge St., Boston (617-589-0909).

A Little Illumination... Whiskey's is shedding some light on its favorite subject—cocktails. The Boylston Street mixologists paired up with Finlandia vodka, Southern Comfort and Jack Daniels in a promotional endeavor featuring blue, red, yellow and green plastic light-up ice cubes available in five specialty drinks, including Finlandia electric slides and SoCo whiskey bombers. Now we can get lit in more ways than one. Nudge, nudge.

Nectar of the Demons... It's time we raise our glasses to the Huntington Theatre Company's production of The Blue Demon. Ambrosia on Huntington, Aquitaine, Betty's Wok & Noodle, the House of Blues, Jake Ivory's and Spire have all concocted a Blue Demon–inspired elixir in honor of Darko Tresnjak's play. The cocktails are available through January and include a $5 discount on a ticket to the show. Anyone who tests out all six Demons (and gets the coupons to prove it) gets a buy-one-get-one-free admission to a performance.

Comfort 101... It's official. Atlantic 101 has shed its upscale, nautical image in favor of a more homey atmosphere. As of Dec. 31, the Atlantic Avenue eatery has declared itself the Living Room. Gone are the wall-to-wall fish decorations and raw bar. Plush couches, floor-to-ceiling curtains and a dessert bar stand in their place. Proprietor John Hauck calls the new theme "a casual and comfortable alternative to the wall of seafood restaurants in the neighborhood." The new menu has doubled in size and still stocks lots of seafood but has more Asian, Southwestern and homestyle influences, thanks to chef Larry Dunn, former corporate kitchen manager for the Cheesecake Factory. 101 Atlantic Ave., Boston (617-723-5101).

The Offspring... Irish families are rarely small. So it's a wonder that it took so long for Davis Square's the Burren to spawn a sister pub. The Skellig opened Dec. 23 in Waltham, and just like its older sib, features decor from the Motherland and live Irish music in the front room and contemporary bands in the back. A V.I.P. room is set to open in February, but until then, dine with the hoi polloi from a menu similar to the one in Somerville. 240 Moody St., Waltham (781-647-0679).

Jae-Walking... After a 10-year run, Jae's Grill is closing its Cambridge Street doors. No word yet on when, but it should be soon. The Asian-cuisine masters chose to let the lease run out so they can devote their attention to the four thriving Boston locations, as well as the recently launched Jae's Inn in Pittsfield.—Jessica Iredale, E.H. and J.S.

SEEN, OVERHEARD OR OTHERWISE BROUGHT TO OUR ATTENTION

What Ever Happened to Blind Date?... NBC has joined the dating game with its upcoming Around the World in 80 Dates, yet another reality-based dating show. This time, as you may have guessed from the title, a lucky bachelor will take a group of girls on dates at exotic locations around the world. If you're looking for love and interested in traveling the world with strangers and are a woman between the ages of 21 and 33 or a man between 26 and 33, call Boston Casting for an appointment Jan. 22 or head to the Rack for an open casting call Feb. 1. Oh, right—you have to be "ambitious, fun and attractive" too. (617-254-0990).

California Dreamin'... Jessica Biel proved she's a true Bruin at heart—and we don't mean a Boston Bruin. The Seventh Heaven star and former Tufts undergrad traded in her Jumbo gear over winter break and is now an official UCLA Bruin. So what does the West Coast have that we don't? Her family, job and boyfriend. Fair enough.

Prenup Panic... Many know but few are willing to admit that wedding engagements aren't always a walk in the park. Allison Moir-Smith is saying it loud and proud with the introduction of her new workshop designed to put an end to the madness that can overshadow the excitement of weddings. "During my engagement, I couldn't find anything to help me get through these weird feelings of confusion about leaving my single life and what it meant to be a wife," she says. And so was born the Emotions of Being Engaged: A Bride's Psychological Journey, a workshop that tackles pushy parents and in-laws, marital expectations and cold feet through discussion sections and hands-on exercises. www.yoursoulswork.com/Brides.htm Jan. 25, 10am-1pm; Feb. 15, 1-4pm. $29. (617-739-5353).

Toast of the Town... It's that time of year again when THE IMPROPER staff begins searching the city's watering holes for Bostonians' most beloved bartenders. Even though we'd be glad to do all of the footwork ourselves, we take readers' opinions to heart. Everyone's got a favorite mixer of elixirs, so don't be shy about giving them some credit. Turn to page 5, fill out a ballot and send it in to us. But do it soon—we need them by Feb. 20.

Q-ed Up... John Somers' Irish pub empire is diversifying its interests. Q, the nightlife impresario's latest addition to his gaggle of hot spots, opens the end of January and bears neither the trademark Irish name nor atmosphere of Somers' other pubs. European DJs pump dance music throughout the house, which includes two V.I.P. lounges and a billiards parlor. 25 Union St., Boston (617-742-2121). —E.H., J.I. and J.S.

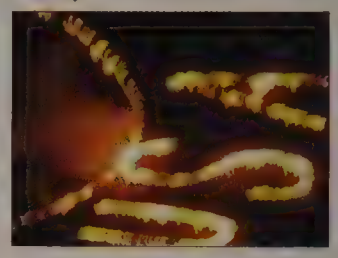
On the Bull

"Bull riding" is a misnomer. "Bull escaping" might be better.

Before I tell you about my trip to the Professional Bull Riders Worcester Classic, let me get something out of the way. Last year I wrote about a monster truck rally that also took place at the Worcester Centrum Centre, but don't get the wrong idea: The Centrum doesn't host just monster truck rallies and bull-riding competitions. It's home to a wide range of culturally diverse events, from the IFMA Freestyle Motocross to the Fishing and Outdoor Exposition to the Central New England RV and Camping Show. No doubt they'll stage an opera there any time now.

Sadly, I can't claim that it was my idea to go to the rodeo. But when I got an invitation that included the words "party bus," "bull riding" and "Worcester" in the same sentence, I signed up. After all, I'm usually wearing chaps on Saturday night anyway.



A party bus, for those who've yet to have the pleasure, is basically a 15-passenger shuttle van accessorized with a gigantic beverage cooler. Our bus also felt as if some prankster had stolen the springs out of the suspension and replaced them with granite pillars. Each pothole would send everyone bouncing off their seats, which, with one hand free and the other devoted to gripping a beer, lent an appropriate bull-riding atmosphere to the trip.

Outside the Centrum, there were three protesters holding signs that read, "Bulls are dying for your entertainment." However, nobody was holding a sign that read "Southerners are getting trampled by bulls for your entertainment," so apparently that aspect of the show wasn't a problem for the activists. To my untrained eye the bulls did not die at all, and in fact generally tossed off the unwanted passenger in a matter of seconds before chasing him around the ring for a bit of additional sport.

But I'm getting ahead of myself. Before the riding began, the crowd had to get properly riled up. The introduction of the riders began when flame-belching towers in the ring shot whistling moon rockets into the ground, setting aflame a giant "USA" in the dirt. After the riders were introduced, the emcee led everyone in prayer. I don't normally pray in stadiums unless a crucial third down is involved, but when a bellowing voice from above commands you to pray, you should probably do it just in case it's actually God.

Once the competition started I quickly lost track of who was winning, partly because of the sheer number of riders and partly because of the sheer number of beers I'd consumed on the party bus. Basically, a bull would come running out with a hat-wearing man clinging precariously to his back; the bull would dislodge the man; and the man would either fling his hat triumphantly into the air, or cling to the fence if the bull decided to rough him up a bit.

Only one guy, who was unfortunate enough to fall off in front of the bull, really seemed to be in any danger throughout all this. The bull didn't poke him with his horns, but got right down in his face and appeared to be trying to bite him for a few seconds. I think that a bull's horns and impressive trampling ability tend to make people forget that bulls also have very large mouths, and getting bit by one wouldn't be very much fun at all.

A BULL'S HORNS AND TRAMPLING ABILITY MAKE PEOPLE FORGET THAT BULLS ALSO HAVE VERY LARGE MOUTHS.

That rider, Ednei Carminhas, escaped with only bruises (the PBR Web site has a section detailing the injuries suffered by riders). The PBR has its health coverage sponsored, which no doubt cuts costs, but it sounds a little strange when they work in a sponsor plug while describing gory injuries. For example, take this account, which concerns our friend "Bleedin'" Ednei: "Ednei Carminhas was struck behind his right ear by a horn, sustaining a laceration that required suturing in the HEALTHSOUTH Sportsmedicine Team training room." And after the blood stopped pouring out of his punctured head, Ednei took an American Red Cross Blood Break—Red Cross, the Right Blood for You!

At the end of the night, a guy named Lee Akin took home $53,095 in prize money. That's right, $53,095 for a total of 25 seconds' worth of work. I've downloaded a PBR membership application, and while I've not yet been aboard a bull, I'm an optimist. I'm practicing throwing my hat. iB

Jimmy Tingle

BY JONATHAN SOROFF

Stand-up comic and humorist Jimmy Tingle was born and raised in Cambridge and spent years on the local comedy circuit before attaining headliner status in the 1980s. In 1990, he began working on his first one-man show, Jimmy Tingle's Uncommon Sense, The Education of an American Comic, which played to positive reviews in Cambridge, New York and Los Angeles. His television appearances include The Tonight Show, Larry King Weekend, The Late Show With Conan O'Brien, The Late, Late Show with Tom Snyder, HBO's One Night Stand, the American Comedy Awards and a stint as contributor and satirist on MSNBC. More notably, he spent two seasons as the humorist/commentator (in the Andy Rooney spot) on CBS's 60 Minutes II. A frequent guest on NPR and WBUR's Morning Edition, his film credits include Next Stop Wonderland and he recently finished work on the new Chris Rock movie Head of State. Through the end of January, he will appear in his one-man show, Jimmy Tingle in the Promised Land, at the Somerville theater he recently took over, Jimmy Tingle's Off Broadway. He lives in the Boston area with his wife and child.

Jonathan Soroff: So is that your real name, and if so, how much grief did you get for it growing up?

Jimmy Tingle: It is, and the grief ended in kindergarten.

JS: Your theater's in Somerville and it's called Jimmy Tingle's Off Broadway. Isn't that a bit of an understatement?

JT: It's off Broadway in Somerville.

JS: Oh, I forgot about that. I don't get over there that often.

JT: Well, build up those frequent flier miles and come see what you're missing.

JS: Finish this joke: Dick Cheney and Condoleeza Rice walk into a bar…

JT: A representative from Bob Jones University is there and he says, "Please. No interracial dating."

JS: Who in public life right now is the easiest target for comedy?

JT: For me, it's still the president, Dubya. The funniest thing recently was when he got the 12,000 page report on Iraq's supposed weapons of mass destruction. It was in Washington for all of 15 minutes and Bush roundly condemned it as a pack of lies. I was saying, "It's 12,000 pages and it's been there under an hour. What's he got—Evelyn Wood in his cabinet?"

JS: OK. Most absurd topic in the current public discourse?

JT: Gays in the military. I think there should be more, and then maybe there'd be less war. "Captain, I couldn't shoot him. He was gorgeous!" Of course, there's also the weapons inspectors in Iraq. How are they gonna find anything over there? It's three times the size of New England. The FBI couldn't find Whitey Bulger, and he was on the payroll! And then there's the idea that Mitt Romney's going to be such a great governor because he ran the Olympics. Well, that's nice, but Massachusetts is a little bit different. We've got the FBI protecting gangsters, the Catholic Church protecting child molesters, the Big Dig $10 billion over budget. We're more like the Special Olympics.

JS: Best gig you ever had?

JT: 60 Minutes II. Millions of people watched, and I did a minute and a half to two minutes a week. It was a good gig. And when it flowed, it was fabulous. The hard thing was trying to get into a groove so it was happening every week. Which also made it the hardest gig I ever had.

JS: How about the worst?

JT: Losing on Star Search. That was tough. It's the first national television exposure, and it's a contest, so you have all these high hopes and everybody's watching it at home, and not only did you lose, but they filmed it.

JS: What would happen if Andy Rooney started taking Prozac?

JT: [Laughs.] I have no idea.

JS: Is he as cranky as he seems?

JT: He was very supportive and helpful to me.

JS: Maybe he should wear looser underwear. Think that might help?

JT: [Laughs.] I don't know. He's 80-something years old. I don't think he's gonna change.

JS: So would you describe yourself as a curmudgeon or a malcontent?

JT: Nah. I'm basically pretty happy.

JS: Are you a big news junkie?

JT: Not the way I was. I got married. I have a child. I have a house. Now I'm running a theater. I have to pay attention to the news, obviously, for my work, but I'm not obsessed with it the way I was when I was single, living in New York, reading two or three papers a day. And you know what? It was so damned depressing. I'm much happier now.

JS: So if you lived in the woods in a cabin with no TV and no papers…

JT: I'd be happy. For about half an hour.

JS: So what's on TV right now that just makes your skin crawl?

JT: I don't really know because as soon as I get to something that makes my skin crawl I shut it off. I don't know what I'm missing.

JS: Worst part of doing TV?

JT: The preparation for it. Radio, you can do it in your underwear. Live performance, you can do it no matter what. TV is lighting and sound and makeup and quiet and blah-blah-blah. It's just very involved.

JS: Funniest person you know?

JT: Probably my mother. I think that's where I get my sense of humor.

JS: Favorite knock-knock joke of all time?

JT: Well, here's the one I've used at comedy clubs when people weren't getting the material: Knock-knock. Who's there? Rita. Rita who? Rita newspaper, and maybe you'll know what the hell I'm talking about.

JS: Stupidest current fad or craze?

JT: Maybe the tattoos. You see these really attractive women in their 20s with tattoos on their necks, or their heads, and you're like, "Oh my God. Did you really think this through?"

JS: You're on NPR a lot. Does everybody over there wear Birkenstocks and drink chai and secretly belong to the communist party?

JT: [Laughs.] I'm the only one who does that. I wear my Birkenstocks through the middle of winter. I'm wearing them right now. And nothing else.

JS: Your act is always billed as very clean…

JT: Yeah, and let me just say that's bullshit. It's clean, in that there's not a lot of four-letter words, but it's certainly not G-rated. Especially if I'm in a little bit of an angry mood.

JS: So what's profanity's proper place in comedy? I mean, Bill Cosby and Bob Newhart made a career out of being squeaky clean, but people like Lenny Bruce, George Carlin, Richard Pryor, and Eddie Murphy made a name by being really foul-mouthed.

JT: That's a misunderstanding. They made a name by being really insightful and really funny. The four-letter words were just adjectives that went along with it. If the profanity is the punchline itself, it can only go so far. There's gotta be a premise leading up to it. So when they made a point about something, the material could stand on its own, and the swearing was like a spice thrown in.

JS: What's the difference between a humorist and a comedian?

JT: A one-man show isn't just "Set-up, punchline. Set-up, punchline." There's a theme to it. That's being a humorist. When I do straight stand-up, a half-hour at a club, there's no premise. There doesn't have to be a beginning, a middle and an end. I'm not necessarily there to present a point of view. But with a humorist, there is. It's the difference between satire and one-liners. And the reality is that a humorist is usually not as funny as a stand-up comic. Garrison Keillor isn't gonna compare with George Carlin in terms of the number of laughs he'll get in an hour.

JS: Last question: As a pick-up line, did you ever try "Wanna feel a little tingle?"

JT: [Laughs.] No.

JS: Well, you can have that. You don't even need to pay me.

JT: Thank you. I guess. iB

"A ONE-MAN SHOW ISN'T JUST 'SET-UP, PUNCHLINE. SET-UP, PUNCHLINE.' THERE'S A THEME TO IT. THAT'S BEING A HUMORIST."

Lou Merloni, 31, No. 26, Boston Red Sox

A major-league catch, Lou Merloni was born and raised in Framingham. Despite early plans to pursue a career in baseball, he recognized the importance of getting an education and went to Providence College, where he was honored as Big East College Player of the Year and Male Athlete of the Year. His dream of joining the Red Sox took time to realize; Merloni was a tenth-round pick in the 1993 draft, and he didn't make his major league debut until May 10, 1998. Five days later, he played his first home game, hitting a three-run homer in his first at-bat at Fenway. One indication of what a romantic, family-oriented guy he is: That night also happened to be his parents' 33rd wedding anniversary, so he hired a limousine to bring them to the game. Despite a knee injury that sidelined him in 1998, being bounced back and forth between the minor leagues and the Red Sox, and a year spent in Japan playing for the Yokohama Bay Stars, he's emerged as a valuable utility player for the Red Sox—he's a hometown boy grown from the Sox' own farm system. His persistence and equanimity, meanwhile, prove he's got heart. Off-season, Merloni is an avid golfer and movie buff and also enjoys playing racquetball and basketball. He earns bonus good-guy points for frequently visiting schools and sports events to motivate the kids. The fans love him, greeting his arrival on the field with chants of "Lou-oo-oo!" The ladies love him too, for obvious reasons. He's all that, and a bag of Fenway peanuts.

Kelly Malone, 25, morning personality, Mix 98.5 WBMX

Someone handed her an All-Access pass to being super cool, and she's never looked back. Effervescent and opinionated, Kelly Malone's got personality to spare and an infectious joie de vivre. The airwaves crackle with her charisma, whether she's acting as sidekick to morning host John Lander, pulling "nutcrackers" (the show's trademark prank phone calls), interacting with listeners or simply reading the news and traffic. Born and raised in Bedford, N.H., Malone studied communications at the University of New Hampshire and worked for two rock stations in New Hampshire as the midday DJ before moving to Boston in 2001 to join the morning crew at Mix. Backstage at concerts or in the studio, she's attracted the flirtatious attention of pop stars like John Mayer, Tony Kanal from No Doubt and Chris Martin of Coldplay, but any guy who wants to date her had better have an athletic side. She's a certified sports nut and loves going to games. As the public face of the radio station, Malone's tireless when it comes to hosting events and making the rounds. Although she does have a red-hot energy supply, Malone has a quiet side too that she indulges with hobbies like black-and-white photography. She's like the girl next door... assuming you live next to a fireworks factory.

INTERVIEW

Getting to Know You:

Kelly Malone and Lou Merloni

IB: What's your ideal first date?
KM: Anything but dinner and a movie. I love salad, but I don't want someone watching me eat one, with lettuce sticking out of my mouth, and movies don't work, because you can't talk. What's good is something creative but low-key, like going to a Red Sox game. It's casual. You're outside. You don't have to get dressed up or try to impress the person.
LM: The most important thing on a first date is going somewhere quiet so you can talk and get to know each other. Maybe a romantic place for a nice, low-key dinner.

IB: What was your worst date ever?
KM: I went out with a guy once, and I spilled a beer all over myself. Then, while we were driving in his car, in the middle of an intersection, a headlight fell out, and he had to try and fix it. It was a disaster.
LM: I try not to have bad dates, and I've never had a date get sick or get into a fistfight or anything, but the worst is when, after 10 or 20 minutes, you realize you have nothing in common and you're just waiting for the night to be over.

IB: What's the cheesiest pickup line you've ever heard?
KM: A guy asked me if I was a Pisces because I had big, watery eyes.
LM: All lines are cheesy, and any girl who'd fall for one isn't the girl for me. But I guess the worst is when some guy looks at the tag on a woman's clothing and says, "I just wanted to see if you were made in heaven."

IB: Secret crush?
KM: Jake Gyllenhaal. I love him. And [Bruins goalie] Steve Shields is cute.
LM: I've had a crush on Michelle Pfeiffer forever, and she just keeps getting better, but Halle Berry's awful close. So is Jessica Biel.

IB: When should you first attempt a French kiss?
KM: Not on the first date, unless you've known the person for a while. I guess whenever you feel the butterflies. But not before.
LM: That's a total feeling thing. I have no problem waiting, but if everything clicks, it might be the first night.

IB: Name some turn-ons.
KM: A strong personality. Someone who can walk into a room and command attention and respect. He also has to be hilarious. A lot of girls say they value a sense of humor, but they really don't. I do.
LM: I'm a "legs guy." Someone who's athletic, obviously someone who likes sports, a sense of humor. I like the sexy, conservative type. In a group of girls, I'm always curious about the quietest one.

IB: Turn-offs?
KM: Gold chains. Someone who swears a lot. Someone who doesn't sound intelligent.
LM: In-your-face, obnoxious women. Women who look at you like "You're not good enough to talk to me." Or women who only like you for being a professional athlete. You can always tell who they are.

SINGLED OUT

BY JONATHAN SOROFF

"You're too picky."

That's what a lot of single people hear from their friends (especially the ones who are already paired off), and it's a bit insulting, really.

Why shouldn't you be picky? Are you supposed to settle for the first person who says "I love you"? If that were the case, lots of us would now be married to the dates who threw up on us at the senior prom.

No, the right person is worth waiting for. Searching for. Even advertising for—hence the multibillion-dollar industry of personal ads, dating services, Internet chat rooms and even old-fashioned matchmakers, not to mention the proliferation of phenomena like "speed dating" and coffee shops devoted to matching up singles. Then there are the blind dates and introductions by well-intended family and friends, some of whom seem to regard being single as a stigma akin to eczema or poor personal hygiene, but one that can easily be cured with a phone call to the downstairs neighbor whose cousin just moved to town.

No wonder the search can get frustrating. Tedious. Dare we even say lonely? But for those of you in the trenches of singledom, we're here to offer inspiration.

Our 2003 batch of Boston's most eligible bachelors and bachelorettes contains a sampling of the accomplished and attractive people out there who happen not to be (currently or publicly) married. That's not to say that they aren't spoken for, or that they're waiting for you to call them and ask them out. In fact, one of the most attractive qualities they all share is that they lead full and interesting lives, regardless of romantic status. But they do offer proof that the good ones aren't all taken. We'd go so far as to say that there aren't enough superlatives in the dictionary to write personal ads to do them justice. So the next time one of your friends calls you "too picky," think of these folks. There are plenty of fish in the sea, but a real catch is worth waiting for.

Cha-Chi Loprete, 45, creative services director, WBCN and WZLX

One of the most lovable men in radio, Loprete was born in Brighton, raised in Cambridge and attended Rindge Technical High School. He started his career at Polaroid, where he worked for seven years, although he'd set his sights on working at WBCN as a kid. In 1981, the station hired him to answer the listener line, and a year later he became a promotions assistant. In the late '80s and early '90s, he was on-air, working weekends and hosting a popular Beatles show, but he preferred working behind the scenes and returned to it. He interviewed three of the Beatles three times, partied like a rock star with icons like David Bowie, Lenny Kravitz, Snoop Dogg, Aerosmith, Beck and U2, and counts Tony Bennett among his close friends. (In his autobiography, Bennett credits Loprete for reintroducing him to the youth market.) For many years, Loprete hosted an uproariously funny cable TV show called Your Mother's on the Roof, and he has a fairly impressive collection of Beatles memorabilia. In his spare time, he's a homebody who lives on a five-acre farm and enjoys reading, movies and looking after his three cats. Overall snapshot: dark good looks married to a hilarious sense of humor and a healthy dose of teen spirit.

Dr. George Chiang, 28,

He's got all the intensity, skill and intelligence of a surgeon, without the arrogance and humorlessness that sometimes go along with them. Born and raised in Los Angeles, Chiang went to Johns Hopkins undergrad and medical school at Tufts. An admitted adrenaline junkie (which explains why he went into surgery), he likes to do things like bungee-jump and surf. He can also hold his own on a tennis court. He's dabbled in Web-site design and loves travel; the more exotic the destination, the better. Stamps in his passport include South Africa, Costa Rica, Brazil and Hong Kong. While following a busy schedule as a surgical resident (with plans to specialize in urology), he still finds the energy to work occasional shifts as a bartender at the enduringly trendy Olives. A wine enthusiast and an outstanding chef, Chiang describes his cooking as "Asian ingredients with French preparation and Latin flair." Best of all, he understands women the way only a man who grew up with three older sisters can. The dazzling smile is genuine, and according to his co-workers, he has an excellent bedside manner. What that means for his love life we'll leave up to the reader's imagination or some lucky woman to find out.

Heidi Strasnick, 28, advertising sales executive, KISS 108

A winning combination of killer looks and chutzpah, she's originally from Marblehead and studied marketing at UMass Amherst. After a short stint in retail, Strasnick was recruited to work in radio and did sales for Smooth Jazz, FM Talk and WBCN. She left radio to help AOL/Time Warner open a local sales office and returned last August, joining Kiss 108, where she's bedazzled everyone from the top brass and on-air talent to (presumably) the guy who makes the coffee. A whirling dervish on the dance floor (or the bar, at certain downtown hot spots), she loves watching football, playing softball and skiing. In addition to hosting a fundraiser for Toys for Tots that has made her that charity's largest single donor in Massachusetts, she throws parties for the Make-A-Wish Foundation. The fact that she works out religiously is obvious from the incredible abs, and her fluent Spanish frequently comes in handy when she travels for pleasure. She plays the piano and hates to cook, but you can't have everything, right? At least she knows all the best restaurants in town, and she adds her own spice wherever she goes.

Chris Collins, 32, sports anchor, NECN

The quintessential good guy who happens to have his dream job and looks like he just fell out of the pages of GQ. A native of Peabody, he went to New Hampton Prep and then Temple University, where he played outfield for the baseball team. Realizing that his two greatest skills were reading the sports page and watching sports on TV, he decided to make jock journalism his career. He got his first job as a sports reporter after teaching school in Peabody for a year, although he continues to visit schools at least once a month to talk to students about achieving success. A TV gig in Alexandria, La., was followed by a two-year stint in Milwaukee, and in 1998 he brought his high-energy reporting style to New England Cable News. Now the channel's star sports guy, he's also a regular on WEEI's top-rated Big Show (where he takes a ration of grief for driving a Mercedes SL 500). Collins spends a fair amount of his spare time socializing with the guys he covers; among his friends are Celtics point guard Tony Delk and fellow bachelors Joe Thornton of the Bruins and Lou Merloni of the Red Sox. When he's not working, however, he spends most of his time giving back—whether he's hosting charity events, volunteering for Paul Pierce's Reading Team or serving on committees for charities like One for the Kids. Quite possibly the best-dressed sports reporter ever, he's eye candy worth listening to.

Melissa Hurley, 29, senior account executive, the Rendon Group

The proverbial woman who does it all, this high-powered PR professional is a Medford native. After earning a bachelor's degree in public relations and broadcast journalism at Emerson, she attended the school of government at Yale University to do graduate work on women in government. A stint in the communications arm of a financial services giant followed, and she served as a speechwriter and special events manager for the Governor's Alliance Against Drugs, before joining the PR agency where she now works on projects like the New England Patriots Super Bin Recycling Program and the Leonard P. Zakim/Bunker Hill Bridge dedication. Since 1992, she's hosted a monthly public affairs program that airs on more than 20 cable stations and earned her Community Newspapers' award for TV Personality of the Year. Her political aspirations led her in 1996 to run for Middlesex County Commissioner and in 2000 for Register of Probate; she lost both races by a narrow margin. Since 2001, she has served as treasurer of the Massachusetts Women's Political Caucus. And if all that weren't enough, she was a finalist in the Miss Massachusetts Pageant and remains active in causes related to children and senior citizens, most notably the St. Jude Children's Research Hospital. Not bad for a mere mortal with a gorgeous mane of hair.

Ken Oringer, 37, chef/owner, Clio

Unlike most chefs, the supremely talented and boyishly handsome Oringer isn't monomaniacal about food. Instead he prefers to surround himself with interesting, well-rounded people, as opposed to die-hard foodies. A native of Paramus, N.J., he got his business degree from Bryant College in Rhode Island and honed his cooking chops at the prestigious Culinary Institute of America. He began his career in 1987 at New York's famed River Café and worked with Jean-Georges Vongerichten at the Lafayette in New York before moving to Providence, R.I., for a stint at the critically lauded Al Forno. His first job in Boston was at the Swissôtel, after which he opened a restaurant in Greenwich, Conn., and then moved to San Francisco to work at the white-hot Silks. He returned to Boston as the chef at Tosca in Hingham, and in 1997, opened the chic Back Bay eatery that has catapulted him into the ranks of nationally recognized celebrity chefs. Heavily involved with numerous charities, Oringer participates in about 30 food-related events per year for causes like Operation Frontline, the Dana-Farber Cancer Center and Share Our Strength. He also finds creative inspiration in traveling extensively; during the past year alone, he has visited Thailand, Spain, Hawaii, Vienna, France and numerous places throughout the United States. A sports enthusiast, he played rugby in college, started snowboarding last year and enjoys baseball and basketball. With looks, talent and an energy level somewhere in the stratosphere, Oringer is a kitchen god worth panting over.

Terri Fuentes, 26, host, Pachanga Latina, WUNI-TV

This one-woman Mardi Gras was born in San Miguel de Allende, Mexico, to a Mexican father and an American mother who had moved to the picturesque 16th-century silver-mining town and art colony to study painting. When her father died, Fuentes' mother moved the family back to her hometown of Framingham. After attending Framingham State, Fuentes took television by storm and now hosts and produces the wildly popular music and entertainment show for Univision New England, as well as serving as entertainment reporter for Noticiero Breve and sideline reporter for Fight Night New England on Fox Sports Net. She has interviewed Latin superstars such as Enrique Iglesias, Celia Cruz, Oscar de la Hoya and John Leguizamo. No prima donna, she produces and edits her own show, in addition to hosting. Recently, Fuentes branched out into acting, landing a role in the indie film Cubicle Slaves. An artist like her mother, she loves painting, as well as going to the theater, museums and traveling. A force to be reckoned with, her star is obviously on the ascent. J.Lo's got nothin' on her.

Lisa Conti, 34,
on-premise manager, Skyy Spirits

A party girl without the histrionics, this lighthearted blond bombshell was raised in Stoneham and earned a bachelor's degree in political science from the University of New Hampshire. After working at Merrill Lynch for three years, she worked as a national sales trainer in the computer industry before discovering her niche in the liquor business. As the person who promotes the Skyy brand at the area's trendiest bars and restaurants, she's the life of the party, oozing charm from every pore and effortlessly making sure that everyone is having a good time. (Anyone who isn't either doesn't speak the language or has lapsed into a coma.) A confessed "gym rat," she runs, lifts weights and spins. In the winter, she skis; summers find her in Newport, R.I. Creative outlets include photography, and she's an inveterate shopper (obvious from her sense of style), but anyone who's ever attended a party she's thrown knows that her real strength lies in celebrating life on an epic scale. Due to her sunny nature, anyone spending time around her might consider wearing SPF-15.

Joe Thornton, 23,
captain, Boston Bruins

That rarest of breeds: an NHL superstar with modesty, intelligence, excellent manners, fashion sense and all but five of his own teeth. Born and raised in the hinterlands of Ontario, Canada, the youngest of three boys, he began playing hockey at age four in a backyard rink his father built. As the youngest member of Team Canada in 1997, he helped win the gold medal at the World Junior Championships. The same year, he was Boston's first pick, and first overall, in the NHL entry draft. Now in his sixth season with the team, he was named captain this year, only the 17th in Bruins history. Off the ice, he's gregarious and approachable—just as likely to be the unshaven guy sitting next to you at the bar watching the game as he is to be playing in it. As for looks, he could be cast as Prince Charming in Disney on Ice, except that he can't figure-skate worth a damn. He's got the looks and the talent (he was just named to his second NHL all-star team), and to top it all off, he comports himself like a gentleman.

Chris Devaux, 32, vice president, Parsons Commercial Group

The picture of the young, successful happy-go-lucky guy. Born in Cortland, N.Y., and raised in Westborough, he graduated from Boston College in 1992 with a degree in communications. For the past nine years, he's navigated the shark-infested waters of commercial real estate while always behaving like a mensch. His company does development, brokerage and management, his bailiwick being sales and leasing. In his spare time, he plays golf (he's a member of Hudson's swanky Charter Oak Country Club), likes to ski and sails whenever he can. Soft-spoken and self-effacing, acquaintances will be surprised to learn that he's a voracious reader, devouring history, biography and fiction. His loyalty to friends and his love of travel are obvious in the fact that he's gone as far as Costa Rica and Ireland for bachelor parties and to Iceland to celebrate a birthday. A fixture at in-spots all over town, he's got the looks, brains and bank. In short, the total package.

Michele Cotler, 26,
special projects producer, 10 O'Clock News on WB-56 (WLVI-TV)

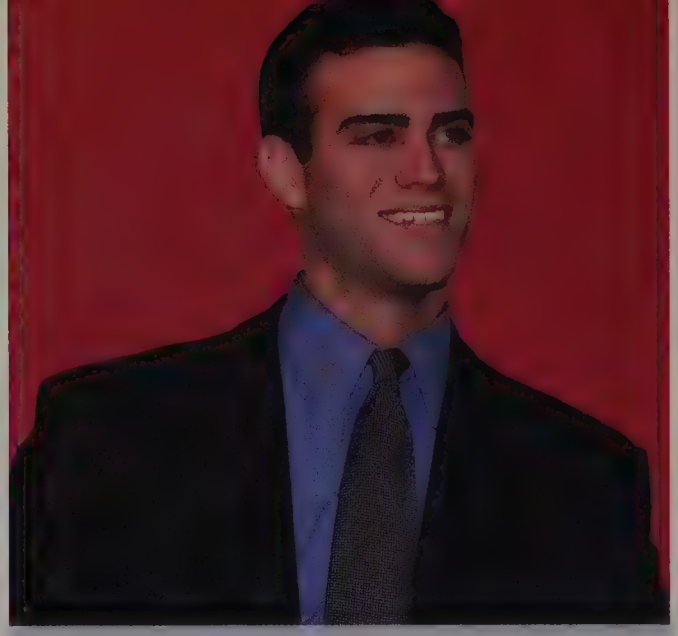
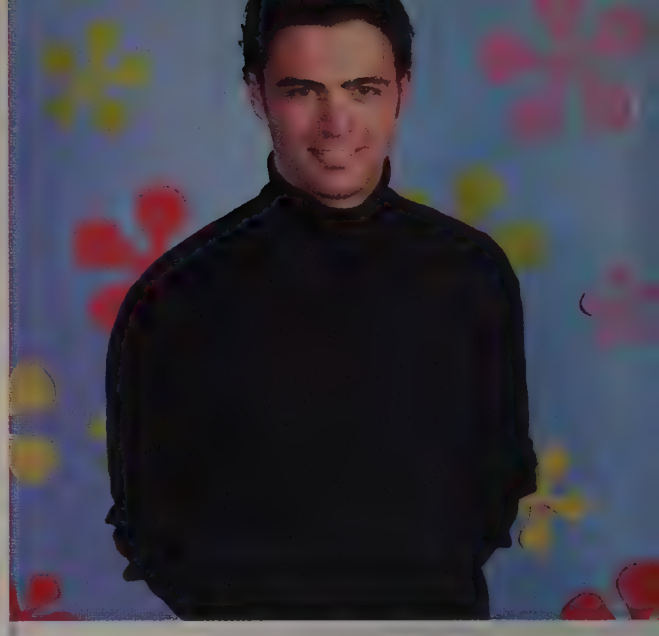
They don't come any more composed than this. Utterly unflappable and fearlessly capable, she's the embodiment of grace under pressure, making her job look easy and looking good while doing it. A native of Roslyn, N.Y., Cotler studied philosophy and communications at New England College in New Hampshire. She started her career at WB-56 as executive assistant to the general manager and swiftly made her way to segment producer and talent booker of (the now defunct) Boston's WB in the Morning. A world traveler who's been to such far-flung locales as India, Vietnam, Morocco and China, she's a superb cook of everything from Indian food and sushi to vegetarian cuisine. A fan of movement, Cotler is a devotee of yoga, an avid snowboarder and in-line skater, and her sense of adventure is equaled only by her sense of humor. Whether she's handling celebrities like Jason Alexander, Matt Damon and Ted Kennedy, or chilling with friends, she's the closest thing we've seen to a real-life Mary Tyler Moore. A party girl without the messiness, her social calendar is as crowded as her work schedule, and yet she always seems to find time to stop and smell the roses.



Theo Epstein, 29, general manager, Boston Red Sox

Sorry, girls—he's spoken for, with a serious girlfriend of more than a year. Nevertheless, until someone's got a ring on her finger, the ball is technically still in play, and the youngest GM in major league baseball history is certainly worthy of daydreaming about. A twin, Theo Epstein was born in New York City and raised in Brookline, the grandson of the Oscar-winning screenwriter Phillip Epstein, who collaborated on Casablanca with his own twin, Julius—one indication that Theo might have inherited a romantic streak. At Yale, he was a sports reporter for the college paper and managed the hockey team. After graduating, he began the career in professional sports that he had dreamed of since childhood, starting out as a PR intern for the Baltimore Orioles. He followed Larry Lucchino to San Diego, where he spent five years with the Padres and went to USD law school, passing the bar exam on his first try. Then came Lucchino's reign as president and CEO of the Red Sox and Epstein's ascent to GM, thrusting the supremely poised and self-effacing whippersnapper into the media spotlight, which he undoubtedly loathes but handles with charm and good humor. His looks are enough to break hearts, he's got musical talent (he plays guitar in the band Trauser), and his brains may be the magic charm that finally breaks the curse of the Bambino.



John Gidding, 26, architecture student, Harvard's Graduate School of Design

Our gay bachelor's credentials are almost absurdly impressive, although there's nothing arrogant or intimidating about him. Born and raised in Istanbul (his mother is Turkish; his father American), he went to boarding school in Switzerland and spent his undergrad years at Yale. Fluent in English, Turkish and French, and currently studying German, he's a gifted artist, a talented cook (specializing in French and Turkish cuisine but with a flair for sushi) and has both impeccable manners and an excellent sense of humor (even about himself). Classically trained on the piano, he's learning to play the guitar and sings with the Boston Gay Men's Chorus. As if all that weren't enough to turn heads, he also models. After appearing in a print ad for software a year and a half ago, he signed with an agent and has since done runway work for Giorgio Armani, Hugo Boss and Gucci. As a student in one of the world's most respected and competitive architecture programs, he's busy finishing his master's thesis on the Turkish embassy in Berlin. Amazingly down-to-earth for someone who belongs on Mount Olympus, he's an oddity among Adonises: gorgeous inside as well as out.

Kimberly Goff, 23,
staff assistant, Northeastern University and graduate student

Sexy and selfless, she's like a cross between Mother Teresa, Doris Day and a member of the Swedish bikini team. A native of Hyde Park, Goff studied communication disorders at the University of New Hampshire and graduated with honors while interning at the Red Cross. Currently working at Northeastern while she earns a graduate degree in nonprofit management, she still finds time to volunteer for the Jimmy Fund and participate in the Junior League, where she's now involved in a mentoring program with the Boys and Girls Clubs. A fan of anything athletic, Goff loves playing or watching basketball, and she's currently training for the 2003 Boston Marathon. She's also a self-diagnosed choc-o-holic, and an ace dessert and pastry chef. Blonde hair and a bewitching smile round out this impressive picture. She's like the homecoming queen of Do-Good High.

Shelli Lockhart, 30s, Nightcast anchor, UPN38 and weekend news anchor, Channel 4 (WBZ-TV)

Imagine the wholesome sass of a pep-squad leader combined with the no-nonsense brass of a seasoned journalist. Born in Kingston, Jamaica, Lockhart moved to Texas at age 10 and wears her heritage as a Southerner loud and proud. A cheerleader in high school and then at Southern Methodist University, she cut her teeth as a reporter in Ardmore, Okla., before moving to Waco, Texas. Her outstanding coverage of the Branch Davidian siege brought her to the attention of a station in Dallas, and she came to Boston in 2001 to join the award-winning news team at WBZ. A fervent animal lover, she did animal rescue work in Texas and currently volunteers with the MSPCA, doing pet therapy at retirement homes with dogs and cats from shelters or one of her own two pets—an American Eskimo and a mutt she rescued from the pound. Currently training to run in the 2003 Boston Marathon on behalf of the American Liver Foundation, Lockhart enjoys sailing on Jamaica Pond and is game for almost anything, having recently tried snow-tubing for the first time. Although she works on weekends, she attends church regularly and maintains a dizzyingly busy social life. As pretty as she is accomplished, she's the total package and the ideal woman for any man who's a sucker for a Southern accent.

entrepreneur and co-owner, Trio

Bearing a vague resemblance to George Clooney, this self-made man-about-town was born and raised in Walpole, the son of a Boston firefighter. He earned both a bachelor's degree and a master's in international finance from Providence College, where he was a track star and won the Big East championship in the 3,000 meter. He worked as a stockbroker and tended bar at clubs such as Pravda, the Roxy and Oscar's while starting his cleaning company, MD Commercial, with his brother. Today, their firm has more than 200 restaurant and hotel clients throughout New England. Three years ago, he and his best friend from childhood, Karl Prinz, opened Trio, the popular hipster hangout in the Leather District, and in April, the pair will open a three-story nightclub called the Pearl Room downtown. An expert chess player, Scanlan routinely does the New York Times crossword puzzle (in pen) in 11 minutes. He's also an avid basketball player and a fixture at the most happening hot spots all over town. Despite the playboy image, he's the salt of the earth, and more fun than a barrel of monkeys.

Lisa Austin, 38,
co-owner, Wild Women Outfitters

Together with her sister, our lesbian bachelorette owns and operates the area's premiere retailer of outdoor clothing and equipment specifically geared toward women (as opposed to the large chains, where 70 percent of the merchandise is marketed for men). Hailing from Kinderhook, N.Y., she has a bachelor's degree in women's studies and photography from UMass Amherst and is also a certified outdoor leader, qualified to take groups on just about any adventure in the great outdoors. Her own have included trekking overland from Nepal to Tibet, kayaking in Alaska's Glacier Bay, winter camping in the Adirondacks and hiking the Presidential Range. More at home in nature than anywhere else, she's currently training for her first triathlon and enjoys playing basketball and field hockey, as well as mountain biking. In quieter moments, she spends time with her Rhodesian Ridgeback, indulges her passion for black-and-white photography and is a year-round devotee of grilling. She's 100 percent natural and a natural-born leader.

Deborah Adams, 30, social worker

She's the type of person who prevents us from despairing over the human race. Raised in rural Contoocook, N.H., Adams studied in Belgium for a year after high school before earning a bachelor's degree in social work at Pennsylvania's Albright College. A master's degree in social work from Temple University followed, after which she returned to New Hampshire and began fighting the good fight. She now works as a clinician in an acute residential treatment program, helping troubled kids between the ages of 3 and 10. She speaks French fluently and fakes Spanish fairly well, reads voraciously and has a self-deprecating wit that buoys the spirits of everyone around. For instance, when it comes to dancing, she says, "I look like I'm having a seizure. I almost took out an entire family on the dance floor on New Year's Eve." Not obsessed with the search for Mr. Right, this gamine, doe-eyed beauty developed a social outing organization for married and single women in their 30s to connect and socialize through activities like a book club and trips to the theater. A true gem, she's the kind of woman any man would be proud to bring home to his mother.

WINE HITS ITS prime

Wine lovers, delight. Your favorite libation is easier to choose, more affordable and more delicious than ever. Before purchasing your next bottle, join us as we count down the 10 hottest wine trends.

BY SANDY BLOCK PHOTOGRAPHS BY CHRIS BEAUDOIN

From a consumer's standpoint, this is truly the golden age of wine. Without question, there's a wider selection than ever before of high-quality, affordable wines in cities like Boston, and the chance you might make the "wrong choice" when buying wine, even one of modest price, has grown very slim. More of us are currently fascinated with learning about, drinking, collecting and enjoying wine, and we have better-trained professionals to advise us. Without much effort, you can find a potpourri of tastings, wine dinners and classes offered on any given night in Boston if you're interested in deepening your knowledge or just having some fun. And it appears that we're going to keep moving in this direction, with exciting new trends that promise to stimulate the palate of every wine lover and budding oenophile in the years to come.

Not that there aren't still hurdles to clear. Beyond a few cosmopolitan pockets like the Back Bay or Beacon Hill, and outside of the fine-dining context, America is still far from being a full-fledged wine culture where people open a bottle with their dinners as naturally as Europeans do. Only 12 percent of the overall adult population consumes close to 90 percent of the wine in this country. But the changes in consumption, and the swiftness with which they've occurred, have been truly profound.

To appreciate how far we've come, just look back 20 years. In 1983, wine was not considered cool. France was one of the largest exporters to the United States, and to most people, quality wine was synonymous with French wine. Therefore it seemed inaccessible to anyone who hadn't learned to parlez-vous. Sommeliers and wine purveyors often dismissed consumers' wine questions with condescension. Not all of the expensive wines produced back then tasted good or were even palatable, but they all shared an unassailable pedigree. Wine drinking still carried a snobbish, clubby image; if you tried a bottle that didn't appeal to you, those "in the know" would imply that you just didn't "understand" its characteristics.

Bordeaux ruled the scene, with few Boston restaurants offering a selection of American wines. Wine lists, leather-bound volumes with reproductions of the labels glaring from each page, were organized geographically, and for many, ordering a bottle was like taking a shot in the dark. Businesspeople dining out were just as likely to sip cocktails throughout their meal, and although Americans had begun drinking more wine than before, more than 80 percent was so-called jug wine—bland, modestly priced generic blends sold in large bottles. A significant percentage of the wine we bought was packaged in the form of "coolers," mixed with sweet fruit juices. (Remember Blue Nun, Riunite and Bartles & Jaymes?) Another hot item was white zinfandel. America had a sweet tooth, and apparently we wanted wines to satisfy it.

Needless to say, today's market is vastly different. The reasons it evolved are the subject for another article, but the major distinction appears to be that sound business principles have replaced the haphazard, arrogant way in which wine was made, marketed and sold in the past. Wine has become consumer-oriented, with the industry now focused on understanding and addressing the public's needs. And what have consumers demanded? That wine should be more accessible, easier to understand, easier to buy, attractively packaged, work well with food and taste better. In other words, exactly the opposite of what the wine world provided 20 years ago.

Paradoxically, as the range of wine options has grown more diverse, the market has also embraced more simplicity. The power of brands, loosely defined as trusted names that convey quality and help narrow down our choices, has asserted itself. In a sea of poorly understood options, brands make us comfortable. "Brand" can mean the choice of wine from a specific company, from a familiar grape variety or from a particular vineyard area; the brand is a magic word that sticks in our minds as a category representing quality, inspiring confidence and motivating us to buy.

WITH A NEW GENERATION OF WINE CONSUMERS, TRADITION COUNTS FOR VERY LITTLE, AND FLAVOR IS FOREMOST. SO IS VALUE.

So what are today's hottest trends? Which wine brands, or categories, are we embracing, and which ones will we buy more of in the future? With a new generation of wine consumers, tradition counts for very little, and flavor is foremost. So is value. The first, most glaring fact is that even though close to 90 percent of the bottles sold in the U.S. cost less than $10, the only segment of the market that's growing at a strong rate, despite our economic woes, is wine that costs more than $10 per bottle. That means the market is slowly embracing greater quality.

Second, red wine drinking has increased dramatically. In 1990, it constituted an endangered species, representing just 14.7 percent of the market, but it's estimated that today, in keeping with worldwide trends, we're consuming as much red wine as white.

Third, our palate has internationalized, with imports taking a greater share of the market (although domestic wine still accounts for more than 75 percent of the total). While France has slipped badly in its sales, Italy has maintained a leadership position. At the same time, wines from countries such as Australia and New Zealand—perceived as stylish, delicious and great values—have established a major presence.

Greater experimentation is a fourth trend. While wines made with a single type of grape continue to rule the market, we've also begun to embrace grapes beyond the triumvirate of chardonnay, merlot and cabernet sauvignon. This spirit of innovation extends into an interest in wines from far-flung, previously obscure regions; specialty styles of wine once considered exotic (ports, champagnes, dessert wines); new consumer-friendly ways of packaging wine (with screw-caps, for instance, rather than corks); and more environmentally friendly methods of production (wine made from organically grown grapes).

A huge development has been greater appreciation for wines conveying more natural and direct grape flavor rather than blandness or oakiness. While some people apparently used to prefer the flavor of wood to that of grapes in their wine, and others wanted neutral-tasting wines that would go down easily, those trends seem to be waning as consumers express a preference for bolder grape flavors and stronger-tasting wines. Younger consumers, in particular, are tasting "outside the box," outside the comfort zone of milder wines, attracted by the allure of distinctively styled, frankly acidic varieties like sauvignon blanc, pinot noir and Riesling.

In another vibrant trend, Americans are rediscovering the romance of wines produced by small-scale artisan vintners. They're increasingly attracted to wines made with traditional techniques (such as natural yeast fermentation and an absence of filtration) arising from single vineyards or tightly delineated regions of origin. Interest in artisan vintners has occurred simultaneously with the industry consolidating into ever-larger business entities. In fact, the two trends are complementary, as many major companies now own smaller wine estates and are investing substantial resources into those estates to maintain the "hand-crafted" production standards thought to enhance quality.

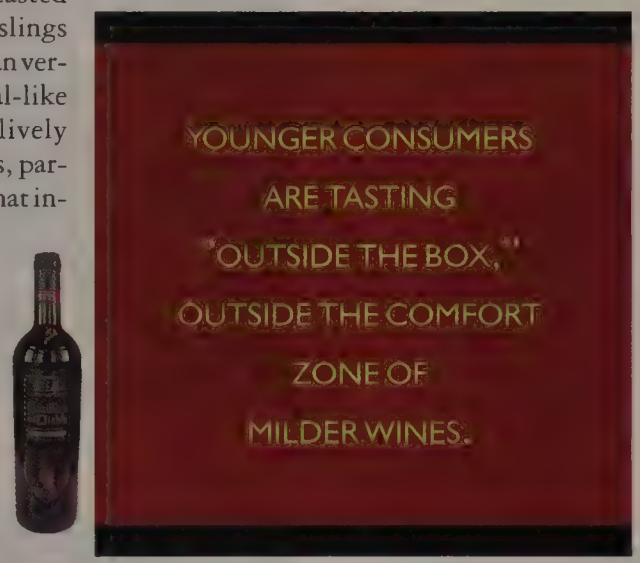
How can you hop on the hottest of these overall trends, the ones we're most likely to see continuing in the future? Here are our nominations for the top 10 categories, in descending order, some of which are still admittedly under the radar:

10. Aged tawny port: A trend within a trend. Port has been taking hold as a delicious after-dinner dessert specialty. It has an interesting story, comes from a beautiful region in Portugal, the Douro, and is marketed by a small number of prestigious, dominant brand owners (much in the manner of Cognac) with exacting production standards. The lush, silky tawnies have taken on a special momentum; great with chocolate, they remain pristine for up to a few months after you open the bottle.

9. Italian Barbera: Available in a range of styles, from simple and inexpensive wine with black-cherry flavor and tart acidity, to riper, more concentrated, smoky wines with rich, black-fruit flavors, this Piemontese specialty has just recently begun to garner the respect it deserves. Like most Italian red wine, it shines at the table, complementing everything from pizza, to burgers, to savory meat stews.

8. Cru Beaujolais: Huh? That's right, there is life after nouveau. Dedicated growers in this largest of Burgundy's subregions have been quietly laboring to revive the reputation of the local Gamay grape and in the process have created a quality revolution. Look for wines from the top villages: Moulin-à-Vent, Morgon, Brouilly and Fleurie, and you will not be disappointed if you want a red wine with vibrancy and prominent red-fruit flavor but not substantial tannins.

7. Riesling: After years of critical popularity but snubbing by consumers fearful they would look unsophisticated if they drank a wine that tasted sweet, a Riesling revolution is stirring. The sweeter Rieslings from Germany's Mosel-Saar-Ruwer, and the drier Alsatian versions, share incredibly enticing aromas and pure, mineral-like acidity. Since there's no noticeable oak and plenty of lively flavor, these are great, versatile dinner accompaniments, particularly with so much of the multiethnic cuisine today that incorporates fruit into its preparation.



6. Carmenere: How much trendier can you be than a grape variety virtually no one has heard of? This Chilean wine, originally from Bordeaux but now no longer grown there, has the added advantage of being a grape no one can pronounce either. But who cares? It's delicious. Think of a cross between merlot, but spicier, and cabernet sauvignon, but mellower. Juicy, lush, velvety on the palate, this abundantly flavorful grape variety exemplifies why Chile has become the No. 4 country we import from and why many of the major international corporations have invested there.

5. California's central coast: One of the big developments lately has been the emergence of cooler climate subzones in California for planting some of the trendiest grapes (pinot noir) that benefit from a longer growing season. In particular, look for wines from Monterey County (Santa Lucia Highlands) and from the southern reaches of Santa Barbara County (Santa Maria Valley, Santa Ynez) because of their brilliant aromas, soft textures and flavor balance.

4. American syrah: While we're acknowledging domestic developments, one of the most remarkable trends has been the advance of syrah in the United States, from a grape that was virtually unplanted 10 years ago (400 acres) to one that is growing everywhere (15,000 acres and climbing). Spicy but not very tannic, Syrah works well with hearty, robust foods like osso bucco, leg of lamb, grilled meats and game. Sales have been growing phenomenally, up 85 percent in 2000 from the year before, and almost as much each year since then. And the grape is planted in areas outside the high-rent Napa/Sonoma axis (Mendocino, central coast, Washington State), so the prices are reasonable.

3. Pinot gris: Italian pinot grigio (also called pinot gris) has become a force to be reckoned with in the market, constituting the No. 1 single category of imported wine in the United States. The hot trend, though, has been the arrival of the "next generation" of pinot gris, more concentrated, better-quality wines from places as diverse as Oregon, Alsace and the Collio subzone of Friuli in northeastern Italy. The best of those wines are necessarily a bit more expensive than bulk pinot grigio (whose popularity is due more to its easy-drinking qualities than flavor intensity) and are also more aromatic, with apple-blossom scents, crisper acidity and more weight on the palate. Oregon, where they have embraced pinot gris as the most popular white grape, is a wonderfully consistent source.

2. New Zealand sauvignon blanc: Sensationally aromatic, with piercing citric flavors and pungent acidity on the finish, sauvignon blanc from New Zealand encapsulates several trends in one. High on flavor, unoaked, innovatively packaged (many of the top wines are now packaged in screw-cap bottles to maintain flavor integrity), great with food and attractively priced, its only drawback has been lack of consistent availability. As New Zealand struggles to keep up with worldwide demand, the wild success of its cool-climate sauvignons has led to a renaissance of the grape (sometimes referred to as "fume blanc" in California), which was almost considered dead and buried by marketers. Here is the where the influence of the culinary arts has asserted itself: Many people believe that crisply acidic wines tend to go better with much of the seafood we're eating today.

1. Australian shiraz: Having just usurped France's position as the second-largest wine exporter to the United States, Australia captures the No. 1 spot for trendiest wine. Its shiraz takes into account what consumers want most: wine that's user-friendly, delicious with food and reasonably priced. And its success is directly tied to a consumer-centric attitude. Rather than protecting traditional ways of winemaking, Australians have sought to understand how Americans want their wines to look and taste and then have applied the technical skills and resources to produce those results. For instance, shiraz (or, as it's known elsewhere, "syrah") is the leading red grape, but just six years ago red grapes accounted for only 31 percent of total production in Australia. Today, in keeping with trends, red grapes cover more than 60 percent of the country's vineyards. iB

HE PAYS, she pays

Who spends more when it comes to dating? Check out our romance expense sheet.

BY ERIN HAGEDORN

As all singles who've spent time actively trying to shed their unmarried status know, the act of dating comes with a hefty price tag. Whether you're a guy or a gal, finding someone who is dateworthy, and then pursuing him or her, can fray not only your nerves but your wallet. If the two of you don't wind up at the altar, you may well end up swearing vows of poverty (or at least swearing about it). But who's really the bigger spender in all this—the guy or the gal? Who ends up putting more cash on the table before the deal is closed?

The way we see it, just how many benjamins dating requires depends largely on two factors: chivalry and self-consciousness. If one or both of you expect a certain amount of chivalry on the man's part (or, conversely, feel committed to "going dutch"), that will naturally affect who has ponied up the most cash by the end of the night. The level of prep work you feel is necessary—from getting a haircut to buying new clothes or hiring a maid to clean your apartment—will also have an effect on the dating expense sheet. (Of course, your costs will also be determined by where you go and how much you need to drink once you get there.)

What with the government's recent pro-marriage efforts like President Bush's push to eliminate the "marriage penalty" tax, we hope it's just matter of time until old-fashioned dating can be counted as a tax write-off. But until then, spend we must.

To find out just how much dating costs these days—and who winds up with the short end of the stick—we decided to break down one hypothetical couple's first four dates into his-and-hers expenses. (Take note that prices reflect the daters' respective chivalry and vanity levels; he ranks a near-perfect 9 on the chivalry scale, while she scores sky high on the vanity chart.)

THE PRELUDE: DRINKS AT A LOCAL BAR

Let's say Annie and Jack meet the old-fashioned way: in person. Fleeting acquaintances in college, they had a couple of science classes together (which, if you factor in $30,000 in tuition a year for each, has them starting out with a combined deficit of $240,000, but we'll chalk that up to the greater good of education). They reunite five years out of school, when they bump into each other at a bar. Jack's just bought a condo on Beacon Hill, while Annie's renting an apartment in the Back Bay. They fill each other in on their post-collegiate activities, and somewhere around the third-beer mark they realize there's something interesting happening between them—something they never noticed in professor Higgenbottom's "rocks for jocks" geology class. A hint or two is dropped, and before they know it, they're cruising down the bumpy road to Datesville.

LESSONS FROM THE LEOTARD

Meditations from the Mat, Daily Reflections on the Path of Yoga, by Rolf Gates and Katrina Kenison, extends the practice of yoga to 365 short meditations.

When you first begin to study yoga, you learn that along with its steadying and stretching postures and its particular method of breathing, yoga is also a spiritual practice. Its teachings include cultivating a positive relationship with ourselves, turning inward and learning to melt into a universal self. But, silent as life is inside that leotard, there's much to be said about the practice. Vibrant, glistening-pated Rolf Gates, a Baptiste Power Yoga instructor, and his student Katrina Kenison have devised 365 paragraph-long meditations that give voice, with a delicious philosophical creaminess, to the struggles and yieldings, the balance and expansion that yoga can offer. Gates pairs real-life dilemmas (was being in the Gulf War, as he was, right or wrong?) with questions and findings from his yoga practice. His once fiercely competitive spirit has been tamed, redirected and broadened, blending into the wide sky of equanimity and curiosity. Of course, even non-attachment—not to mention the rigors of the yoga postures—involves a process of learning and difficulty, so each little journey he describes demonstrates the everlasting hammock-swing between the problems of life and their potential solutions.

IN THE TIME BEFORE IKEA

Reside is a new shop at 266 Concord Avenue, Cambridge (617-547-2929), selling mid–20th century modern furniture that a younger generation is discovering. Reside buys some pieces too.

Reviving the elements of the popular Somerville shop NV 53, this new store, well, resides, invitingly on a Cambridge corner that nicely displays the airy coolness of its midcentury modern furniture. The designers of the era—Marcel Breuer, Mies van der Rohe, Herman Miller and various Scandinavian and Japanese artists—display their spare aesthetics in their furniture. The 1940 Springer chair puts bounce into its curvy metal base through suspension, not stuffing, feeling surprisingly deep and comfortable. The Eames chair, designed in wartime from available materials, is like two curvy flying saucers of wood, for back and butt. Unoccupied, it seems to float in the room. A very elegant oval Noguchi glass table recently for sale is an original, with a three-quarter-inch thick, juicy green glass rim. Yet another chair of latticed cotton webbing holds and molds you, reclining just slightly. Wall units here—often made of teak—rise up in their own spaciousness, including wide cabinets (for those LPs!) promising an unclogged look, even when filled up. Yellowish Heywood Wakefield dining room tables, a counterpoint to the grandiose lacquered skating-rink style, feel nicely intimate.

CAPTURE THE JAZZY FIREFLIES OF THE MOMENT

Improvisational actress, teacher, trainer and speaker Daena Giardella takes notions and principles from acting and helps you apply them to your own life. Her CD, Improvisation in Everyday Life, costs $20 and her next improv classes begin in March. For more information call 617-924-9596 or go to www.daenagiardella.com.

Imagine a cat curiously pondering the joys of the kitchen cabinet: Kitty is "in the moment." Actress Daena Giardella proposes that we can learn from emulating that attitude of being, which is also the specialty of professional improvisers. Actually, improvisation is unavoidable, since every moment of life is excitingly, dangerously created on the spot, however seemingly scripted and predictable it may seem. Giardella invites you to first take a positive attitude toward accepting a given reality, and then enter the situation in an active, intentional, alive state. That positivity may also hold a fierce No in its fist, because indeed improv, like life, is also about "conflict, the friction, the heat, when contradictory impulses rub against each other." By accepting this Zen-like state, you, Life Improviser, become loose and open to the perpetual freshness of life's possibilities, while at the same time staying internally centered. Koans and paradoxes abound here. There's tension between harmonizing with others and riffing on your own, between yielding and standing firm, between respecting the immediate past and future and opening up to the crystalline Now. Improvisation is fun because it's humorous, absurd and confronts the unknown sexily.

A Room Apart

The Blue Room offers value and sublime winter dishes that warm and comfort.

BY J. CHARLES MOKRISKI • PHOTOGRAPHS BY BERTA A. DANIELS

Wandering around Kendall Square in search of One Kendall Square is not my idea of the perfect way to work up an appetite. However, once we found the Blue Room—a few blocks away from the real Kendall Square, near the intersection of Portland and Hampshire streets—and were safely inside its inviting, garden-level space, all was forgiven. In fact, the Blue Room's misleading address is the only discordant note at this wonderful establishment, where well-conceived and professionally executed dishes accompanied by well-chosen, value-priced wines reward diners determined enough to persevere until they find the restaurant.

Exposed brick and stone walls, colorful painted wooden panels, track lighting, zinc-topped tables and upholstered banquettes provide an engaging dining environment. A large, quasi-circular bar separates the major part of the dining room from a more private space to the east. The open kitchen—designed with a combination of candor and showmanship—is a beehive of activity.

The Blue Room's large and varied wine list offers a number of reasonably priced selections that are a welcome departure from the usual suspects. Among the red wines offered by the glass is Carmignano Ambra ($6.75). This 1999 Tuscan blend of Sangiovese and cabernet sauvignon was soft but well structured, with good forward fruit and a fine bouquet. More unusual was the St. Michael-Eppan ($5.75), a red from Italy's northernmost Alto Adige province, which borders on Austria. This wine, made using the obscure Lagrein grape variety, has a restrained, almost steely dryness that marries well with dishes across the spectrum, from fish to fowl to beef. Wines were served in large, refined stemware, and in a simple but sophisticated gesture too infrequently encountered, they were poured at table—small taste first—rather than arriving without the bottle from the bar.

Among the Blue Room's appetizers, the puree of salt cod ($8) with sourdough toasts was a satisfying winter choice. Served in a small soufflé dish, this preparation, which usually goes by the French name brandade, was the perfect comfort food: a creamy mixture of cod and potato, accented with chopped chives. Provençal fisherman's soup ($6) had the thick consistency of gazpacho, what the French would call soupe in contrast to the more liquid potage. It boasted good fish flavors, an unabashed dose of garlic and a bouquet of Mediterranean herbs. The final appetizer we sampled was the pizza of the day ($9). This amply sized, thin-crusted pie came lavishly topped with Tuscan salami, broccoli rabe, oyster mushrooms, Bratenero cheese (from the Northern Italian town of Bra, near Milan) and caramelized onions.

Main courses included sautéed rainbow trout ($19), a crisp-skinned whole fish garnished with fingerling potatoes, savory spinach studded with nuggets of smoky bacon and a pleasant mustard-butter sauce. To the relief of bone-wary diners, the spine of the trout had been efficiently removed after cooking. The grilled tuna ($23), a sushi-quality slab, was simply seared and served with a tonnato sauce—a garlicky, aioli-based sauce usually served with veal tonnato—together with roasted potatoes and a generous mound of pleasantly bitter braised escarole. A pristine, juicy wedge of lemon and two large caper berries completed the garnish.

The huge, crisp-skinned roast chicken with rosemary, capers and garlic mashed potatoes ($18) was moist and flavorful. It seemed the kitchen had ventured beyond rosemary to give the chicken a more complex, even exotic, range of flavors usually associated with other herbs of the eastern Mediterranean. Even the voluptuously creamy potatoes yielded further flavor dividends, with lemony nuances complementing the restrained, mellow garlic.

While my youngest son was disappointed that the Blue Room, a quintessential bistro, did not offer steak-frites, his standard bistro choice, it was hard to argue with its beef offering. The grilled Black Angus steak ($22), a well-marbled strip sirloin, was grilled to rare perfection and served with truffle butter and a mountain of sautéed mushrooms. Parsnip mashed potatoes, which we had requested on the side for fear they would otherwise be buried beneath the steak, arrived in a small soufflé dish, nicely browned on top.

The Blue Room does even small things well. Hard-crusted, mildly sourdough loaves from Iggy's, Cambridge's primary boulangerie, are accompanied by soft, sweet butter. Substantial, serviceable tableware comes wrapped in large, absorbent white cotton napkins. Coarse salt and cracked pepper are set out in tiny wells, rather than shakers, adding a note of refinement.

The Blue Room's desserts would be amazing if for no other reason than their prices—$5 or $6 in contrast to the $9 and $10 dessert tariffs routinely encountered in upscale Boston restaurants. The warm chocolate cake with soft, cinnamon-spiced whipped cream and dark bittersweet chocolate sauce would have been a winner at twice the price. Warm apple tart with vanilla-bean ice cream featured firm, sweet-tangy apples aromatically spiced with nutmeg or allspice. Unfortunately, the tough, coarse pastry did not do justice to the fruit.

Service at the Blue Room was efficient, informed and professional. Oversize portions made it inevitable that some of our choices would be finished at home, and they were efficiently packaged and presented. Last, but certainly not least, in terms of quality as a function of price, the Blue Room is unbeatable. Its first-rate ingredients, top-notch preparation, generous portions and restrained prices deliver real value. Steve Johnson, a Hammersley alumnus, bought the Blue Room five years ago. Under his stewardship, it has remained one of the premiere bistros in the Boston area. As my IMPROPER colleague Carolyn Faye Fox has observed, this one's a keeper. iB

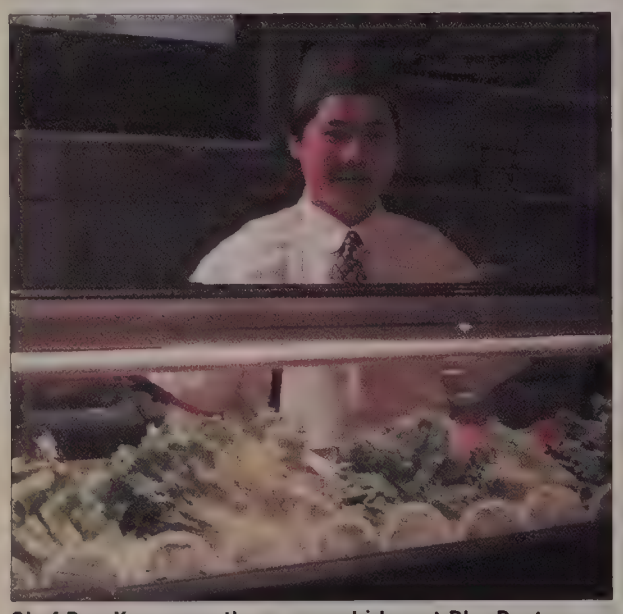
DISH

Whose Wine Is It, Anyway?

(Almost) local boy makes (very) good...

BY CAROLYN FAYE FOX



Chef Ben Kuo mans the new sushi bar at Pho Pasteur.

David Weitzenhoffer, last seen hereabouts as sommelier at the new Locke-Ober, and previously wine director at the old UpStairs at the Pudding, has hit the big time in the big city: He's now wine director at Lidia Bastianich's Felidia in New York City.

His new job is simply "great," says Weitzenhoffer, who oversees a list with "almost 1,200 labels" at the Wine Spectator Grand Award restaurant. Although he's busy, he plans to visit the new UpStairs on the Square soon to check out wine director/general manager Lorenzo Savona's revamped wine list. Savona, by the way, was Weitzenhoffer's first employer (at Les Zygomates) after the Seattle native moved to Boston.

Meanwhile, the UpStairs crew is evolving into an all-star expansion team. In addition to marquee players such as chef de cuisine Amanda Lydon (ex-Metro, ex-Truc) and the aforementioned Savona, proprietors Deborah Hughes and Mary Catherine Deibel have added Susan Regis, formerly of Biba, to their roster.

Apparently, Regis, who recently moved back to Boston after a year on the West Coast, dropped in at the new UpStairs for a bite, chatted with Deibel...and the rest is not history, but future.

And the future will be a busy one for Regis, because Deibel has charged her with a multi-faceted mission. First, as new chef of the Monday Club Bar, the casual counterpart to the upstairs Soiree Room, Regis is expected to "bring an influx of interest to the cuisine downstairs," adding "lots of specials," says Deibel. Simultaneously, Regis will create and institute both an afternoon tea menu and a late-night bar menu. The tea is sure to be quite lovely, but the freshly minted Thursday Girls' Night Out, a Hughes/Deibel concept, sounds utterly irresistible.

"We know a lot of great women who would be part of that," says Deibel. No kidding—she may need the Jaws of Life to pry the girls off the stools come closing time!

SECOND COURSE

Ken Oringer has finally come up with an official name for Clio's sashimi bar: Uni, after the luscious and pricey gonads of sea urchins served up as sashimi. Makes sense, when you consider the tiny sashimi bar is a few steps "down there" from Clio's dining room and bar. And it's so much more elegant than "The Lurchin' Urchin."

Speaking of sea creatures, Boston's dining scene continues to extend its tasty tentacles into nearby suburbs. Pho Pasteur, just a few months into residence at the Atrium Mall in Chestnut Hill, has added a 20-foot marble sushi bar to accommodate the creations of newly hired sushi master Ben Kuo (formerly of Ginza, Fugakyu and Jae's).

After a one-year hiatus, the Architectural Masters of Pastry competition will be held at The Top of the Hub March 20. About two dozen entries are expected for this year's theme: bridges. Just how much glow-in-the-dark blue sugar will it take to make a candied copy of the Zakim Bridge?

Finally, if one of your New Year's resolutions was to brush up on your barbecuing expertise, you should know about the New England Barbecue Society (www.nebs.org/bbq/default.htm). Membership entitles you to participate in road trips to local BBQ restaurants, enroll in BBQ cooking and judging classes at the Maynard Rod and Gun Club, and compete in BBQ competitions against teams like the Pyro Porkers, UFO Social Club, Petey's Crispy Critters and Dirty Dick and the Legless Wonders. Education: Elvish Explained

Remember that nerdling group in high school who huddled in corners during lunch to exchange medievalist tidbits and spoke in Elvish (the ones who eschewed pep rallies to play Dungeons and Dragons and who read every fantasy novel that Lloyd Alexander wrote)? Chances are, they're now rich, early-retired dot commers. And what's more, they're having the time of their lives showing off their knowledge of Middle Earth and critiquing the The Two Towers. Here's your chance to play catch-up concerning the world's most popular medieval trilogy. Michael Drout, a professor at Wheaton College, has created a distinctive niche as an expert on the writings of J.R.R. Tolkien. The lucky medievalist discovered an unpublished book by Tolkien. He's now creating the world's most comprehensive database of works about the author and establishing Tolkien Studies, a scholarly journal. Hear Drout's talk, Understanding Tolkien and The Lord of the Rings, at the Boston Center for Adult Education. 44 Comm. Ave., Boston (617-267-4430). 6:30-8:30pm. $15.

Film: Rock Junk Meets Silent Film

Some of you more cinematically inclined readers will easily be able to place the classic black-and-white image of a pirate sliding down the giant sail of a ship while slicing it with a knife. For those who don't, it's from Douglas Fairbanks' greatest cinematic triumph, the 1926 silent film The Black Pirate. Here's your chance to see the film that produced this standout image, in a screening set to live music by the Alloy Orchestra. For the fast-paced pirate scenes, the musicians thrash and grind out soulful music from an outrageous assemblage of found percussion instruments and state-of-the-art electronics. Somerville Theatre, 55 Davis Square, Somerville (617-876-9170). 8pm. $15.

THU./JAN. 23-SAT./FEB. 1

Performing Arts: Shock Rock

If you didn't make it to last fall's wildly successful production of Hedwig and the Angry Inch at the Institute of Contemporary Art, you're in luck. The Obie-winning off-Broadway smash is heading back to Boston at the end of January—this time, at Axis dance club on Lansdowne Street. It's the story of "internationally ignored song stylist" Hedwig Schmidt, an East German rock 'n' roll goddess—the victim of a botched sex-change operation that has left her with just "an angry inch." When we originally saw the production at the Stuart Street Playhouse, we dubbed it a hit. It's still just as groundbreaking three years later. Axis, 15 Lansdowne St., Boston (617-432-NEXT). 7:30pm. Jan. 23-25, 29-31 and Feb. 1. $25.

Titian's Europa, 1559-62

SAT./FEB. 1-SUN./FEB. 2

Tastings: Boston Wine Expo

Gather more than 16,000 oenophiles in a giant room with 440 wineries from 18 countries pouring 1,800 different wines and what do you get? A spitting orgy. Though, judging by the raucous crowd of normally sedate individuals, there was more swallowing than expectorating going on at last year's Boston Wine Expo. Held at the World Trade Center, the expo is the largest consumer wine event in the country. But it's not all about imbibing. Sign up for wine seminars, watch cooking demonstrations and socialize with fellow wine drinkers. Or meet this year's celeb chef Rachael Ray, host of the Food Network's 30 Minute Meals and $40 a Day. World Trade Center, Boston (877-946-3976). MBTA: Red Line to South Station. 1-5pm. Until Jan. 23: $60 for one day, $82 for two days. After Jan. 23: $70 and $92.

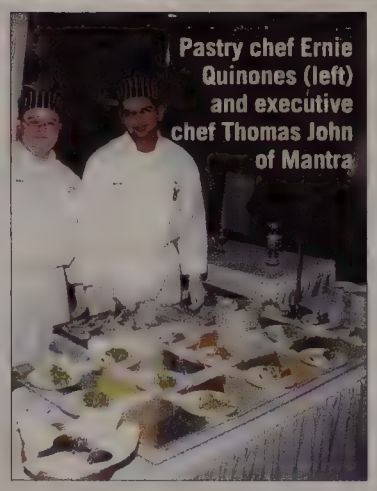
THROUGHOUT 2003

Art: Centennial Celebration

Irving, Texas. Waldorf College in Forest City, Iowa. The Tour de France. The Salmon and Trout Association. Ford Motor Company. What do these things have in common? They all turn 100 this year. Add to the list our very own Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum, which kicks off its centennial celebration this month. One hundred years ago, Mrs. Gardner created a personal museum in her extravagant home, filling it with artwork from Asia, Europe and the Middle East and building her collection to preeminence. In celebration of the 100-year milestone, the museum presents a series of special exhibitions and programs. The celebration kicks off on Jan. 24 with a show by conceptual artist Joseph Kosuth. Included is his famous textual neon work which will be installed along the museum's outer wall. Coming up in April is The Making of a Museum: Isabella Stewart Gardner as Collector, Architect & Designer. See www.gardnermuseum.org for schedules of special lectures, performances and programs. 280 The Fenway, Boston (617-566-1401).

FRI./JAN. 31

Tastings: Food and Wine for All



Pastry chef Ernie Quinones (left) and executive chef Thomas John of Mantra

How many restaurants do you think you've sampled in Boston? 30? 40? Here's a chance to increase that number trifold. (A quick caveat: The IMPROPER does not encourage, promote or condone binge eating with the exception of this one day of the year, when you'll find us gorging on gorgonzola, galantine, gumbo and ganache.) At the Anthony Spinazzola Foundation Gala Festival of Food & Wine more than 130 restaurants dish up bite-size samples of their gourmet cuisine to benefit this charity dedicated to hunger relief, culinary education and job training for the homeless. Wash down duck à l'orange, potato blintzes with sour cream and caviar, or pumpkin risotto with a glass of chardonnay or Beaujolais from one of the 90 winemakers in attendance. It's a foodie's version of paradise. World Trade Center, Boston (781-344-4413). MBTA: Red Line to South Station. 7:30pm. $175.

SAT./FEB. 1-MON/FEB. 3

Performing Arts: Twice as Nice on Ice

If we were to ask, What makes Boston Boston?, one of the half-dozen places that comes to mind is the Frog Pond on Boston Common. The Hub's answer to Rockefeller Center has a beautiful view of the State House and Beacon Hill from its nook on the north side of the Common. That said, there's no better place to see a series of free figure skating exhibitions by the Boston Ice Theater. The show features performances by former Ice Capades skater, Elin Gardiner Schran, former Nutcracker on Ice principal skater Jen Nestleberger and United States Senior Men's competitor Ian Macadam. The series culminates with Greatest B.I.T.s, featuring favorite numbers from past Boston Ice Theater shows and a special encore performance of its new production, Snow. Bring a donation of canned food or toiletries to benefit Rosie's Place. Frog Pond Skating Rink, Boston Common, Boston (617-635-2120). Feb. 1-3, 4:30pm. Free.

THU./JAN. 23-SUN./JAN. 26

Dance: A Hop, a Skip and a Jump

The optimal way to rid yourself of the end-of-January blahs is to plop yourself on a faraway, sunny beach, soak in the vitamin D and pump yourself full of piña coladas. Another, not so extravagant, method is to watch people who are so full of life that you're invigorated just by watching them. That's where the annual gusto-filled Flamenco Festival comes in. This annual Spanish dance extravaganza, now in its fourth year, showcases fiery flamenco dancers who radiate emotion and energy as they rhythmically writhe, clap and stamp their feet. This year, the fest features two faithful representatives of Gypsy-style flamenco, Juana Amaya and Farruquito. Consider the $30-$50 price tag a mental health expense. Shubert Theatre, 265 Tremont St., Boston (617-482-9393).

WED., JAN. 22-SUN./FEB. 2

Performing Arts: Free at Last

With Illinois governor George Ryan commuting the death sentences of 167 condemned inmates in early January and labeling the state's penal system a "catastrophic failure," the timing couldn't be more perfect for Jessica Blank and Erik Jensen's controversial new drama, The Exonerated, at the Wilbur Theatre. Over the summer of 2000, the authors traveled across the United States, interviewing 40 former death row prisoners. The interviewees were from vastly different ethnic, religious and educational backgrounds. The only thing they had in common was that all 40 had been sentenced to death and were subsequently found innocent and freed by the state. The play is a compilation of their interviews and individual court documents and stars Brian Dennehy and Marlo Thomas. The Wilbur Theatre, 246 Tremont St., Boston (617-423-4008). Tue.-Fri., 8pm; Sat., 5 and 9pm; Sun., 2 and 7pm. $25-$67.

SAT./ FEB. 1

Performing Arts: Sing Like an Egyptian

Romance and intrigue in ancient Egypt—it sounds like the makings of an Indiana Jones movie. Or since Elton John got involved in Disneyfying opera a few years back, you might recognize this as the plot of Aida. On Feb. 1, Opera unMet presents a concert performance (minus the Elton John influence) of Giuseppe Verdi's most popular opera, which opened in Cairo in 1871. Opera aficionados already know the plot: a love triangle between an Ethiopian princess who has been enslaved in Egypt, an Egyptian princess and an Egyptian commander. Don't expect any happy endings. The atmospheric opera is performed in Italian and subtitled in English. Jordan Hall, New England Conservatory, 30 Gainsborough St., Boston (617-536-2412). $20, $10 children, students and seniors.

HITLER: THE PREQUEL

Max is a portrait of the dictator as a young artist

BY PAUL SHERMAN

If Adolf Hitler had succeeded as an artist, would he have still become the world's poster boy for unadulterated evil? That's one of the many provocative questions asked by Max, a fascinating blend of fiction and fact that dips back further in time than most Holocaust movies do. In fact, the movie takes place 15 years before Hitler came to power and 20 years before he foisted his policies on countries beyond Germany.

Max is more about World War I than World War II. The movie's Hitler, played by Noah Taylor of Shine and Almost Famous, is a German war veteran trying to put his life together after his country's defeat, and so is the movie's title character, Max Rothman (John Cusack). Life-changing war experience is the gut-level bond that draws uneducated, unkempt anti-Semite Hitler and urbane, well-dressed Jew Rothman together. While Hitler may have lost his faith in the future during the war, Rothman lost his right arm and with it his career as an artist. As the movie begins in Munich in late 1918, Rothman, who's based on several Jewish art dealers of the time, is opening a gallery in an abandoned iron foundry and embracing the explosive and irreverent modern works by non-traditional, post-war artists like George Grosz and Max Ernst.

Hitler aspires to be an artist too, so he approaches Rothman with his portfolio. But Hitler and Rothman's art worlds are heading in two different directions. While the modern art Rothman favors is all about breaking down walls and forms, Hitler is stuck in Art 101. Ernst may be pioneering surrealism and Grosz may be lacing his caricatures with political meaning, but despite the storm brewing inside Hitler, his art always comes out as generic portraits and landscapes. Still, Rothman is fascinated by Hitler, a nebbish who walks and talks with a passion that never quite reaches his canvas. Rothman gives Hitler money for supplies, takes a few of his paintings on consignment and encourages the former corporal to dig deeper. Hitler becomes his new project.

It's in these scenes between the unlikely acquaintances that Max crackles with creative energy. Cusack's Rothman is glib and rich, but never arrogant; Hitler is uncouth, but never uninteresting. The pair banter about art, war and politics, with Rothman thriving on artistic and personal freedoms and Hitler squirming with discomfort whenever such freedoms get in his path (like when he sits down to paint or when Rothman takes him to a brothel). At one point, they're talking about the impact of the war on their art, and Rothman says to Hitler, "I was there and you were there, and I know what it looked like. But what did it feel like?"

But Hitler still can't get the chip on his shoulder into his art. He discovers, however, that he can channel such feelings into speaking, after he's asked to make speeches for the small extremist group that will later become the Nazis. To Rothman's dismay, Hitler starts turning to speaking instead of art as an emotional outlet. "I am the avant-garde! And politics is the new art," he shouts at Rothman, after the gallery owner confronts him following a speech.

Writer-director Menno Meyjes, making his directorial debut after writing scripts for The Color Purple and The Siege, among others, has certainly penned nothing quite so lively as this collision of time, place, character and history. Max colorfully evokes the heady days of post-war Germany, and through its fictionalized Hitler and its composite character of Rothman, it addresses politics and history in personal, everyday terms. Above all, Max carries a remarkably light touch, and blends levity and tragedy effortlessly. True to the movie, Cusack and Taylor never play their characters as symbols, just as men unsure where the future will take them. Were Max not such a rich mix, it might have seemed a misguided attempt to rationalize Hitler's emerging evil instead of the lyrical tragedy it is. iB

About Schmidt ★★★
Alexander Payne's latest doesn't have the satiri sting of his previous Citizen Ruth and Election, but i never tries to. Instead, it's a quietly disarming stor of a 66-year-old Omaha insurance executive (Jac Nicholson) who, when he's put out to pasture by hi company and his wife suddenly dies, discovers some thing he would have never admitted to himself be fore: that he doesn't like how his life turned ou Nicholson thankfully leaves his mannerisms be hind, and the movie's bittersweet, b.s.-free tone i much more real than Nicholson's slightly simila sitcomlike As Good as It Gets. (At Boston Commor Fenway and suburbs.)

Adaptation ★★★½
Another inspired mind-bender from the guys wh made Being John Malkovich. This time, director Spik Jonze and writer Charlie Kaufman have made a movi loosely based on a book: a movie about making a movi based on a book. It follows Kaufman (a terrific Nicola Cage) in his desperate struggle to turn Susan Orlean The Orchid Thief into a screenplay, and comes up wit the funniest, shrewdest peek into the creative proce in years. Between Kaufman's hilariously low sel esteem, the imaginary twin brother (also Cage) wh always one-ups him, his encounters with Orlea (Meryl Streep) and her encounters with the philosoph ical redneck (Chris Cooper) at the center of her book this is absurd and inspired—right down to the "Ho lywood ending" spoof resolution. (At Boston Com mon, Fenway and suburbs.)

Antwone Fisher ★★★
The movie called Antwone Fisher was written b Antwone Fisher and tells the story of his emotiona transformation—from rage-filled, much-abandone orphan to relatively well-adjusted adult. Denze Washington's directorial debut doesn't stray very fa from putting a more "feel good" spin on the Good Wi Hunting formula: Denzel plays a Navy shrink who, à l GWH, learns from his patient as he helps him wor through his emotional baggage. But the movie's no frills sincerity works, and newcomer Derek Luke has a endearing lack of polish. (At Boston Common, Fenwa and suburbs.)

Catch Me If You Can ★★★
Run, Leo, Run. DiCaprio plays a 1960s teen con man i a Steven Spielberg movie that, refreshingly, just tri to be brisk entertainment. DiCaprio's character turn to cons—bank fraud, impersonating an airline pilo and a doctor—after suffering the downward mobilit of his family and the break-up of his parents (Christ pher Walken, Nathalie Baye). His ill-gotten gain recompense for his dad's troubles with the IRS. So do leading FBI agent Tom Hanks on an amusing, year long cat-and-mouse chase. In all-important movie s mantics, this is inspired by a real story, not based o one, so it sometimes stretches credibility. It can als seem like the shallow version of The Talented Mr. Rip ley. But it's an infectious ride, and amazingly, it has John Williams score that isn't a rehash. (At Bosto Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Chicago ★★★
Life is still a cabaret in this movie based on a later Kan der-Ebb musical. That's the whole premise of th spoof of Roaring Twenties Chicago, in which singing star (and murderess), a star wannabe (an murderess) and a flashy lawyer (and defender of mu deresses) all fight for the spotlight and the headline Renée Zellweger is the wannabe who discovers mu der was a great career move; Catherine Zeta Jones the singer trying to keep her name alive while in jai and a surprisingly amusing Richard Gere is the up scale shyster with all the answers. All three know ju how to manipulate truth, justice and the America way through performance. Sometimes the relatio ship between the production numbers and the plot awkward—and 1943's nonmusical version of th same story, Roxie Hart, is funnier—but this still ha lots of gusto and laughs. (At Boston Common, Fe way and suburbs.)

Confessions of a Dangerous Mind ★★
Based on Chuck Barris' unauthorized autobiograph George Clooney's directorial debut is an absurd tri inside the fried mind of the Dating Game and Newlywe Game creator, Gong Show host and part-time CIA assa sin. What's that, you didn't know Chuckie Bab knocked off 30-odd undesirables in 15 years of clan destine service to Uncle Sam? Well, maybe he did an maybe he didn't. That's the fun thing about the movi which captures the patchwork structure and stream of-consciousness tussle with reality of Barris' book Clooney has Adaptation screenwriter Charlie Kau man handling script chores here, and a fittingly fra zled Sam Rockwell as Barris. (At Boston Commo Fenway and suburbs.)

Halbe Treppe* (Grill Point), which shows as part of the Harvard Film Archive's New Films from Europe series, follows two couples stuck in a rut until a scandalous affair adds a thrill to their lives.

Die Another Day ★★
A big disappointment, from what is easily the least of the Pierce Brosnan Bond films. Just about everything here is subpar for what you expect from a Bond film: It has one of the series' worst theme songs yet, surprisingly bland villains, underdeveloped female characters (no pun intended), wintry CGI effects that are worse than those in Extreme Ops (ouch), so-so gadgets and a plot that struggles to make you care—and fails. Korea, Hong Kong, Cuba and Iceland are Bond's ports of call this time, while Halle Berry's American agent and Rosamund Pike's fellow British agent are his shag buddies. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Far from Heaven ★★
Todd Haynes' drama lovingly re-creates the glossy world of Douglas Sirk, whose brilliant 1950s Technicolor melodramas, such as All That Heaven Allows, meticulously presented post-war suburbia as a superficially rich yet emotionally stifled community. Haynes attempts to up the ante in Sirk's "women's pictures" by surrounding housewife Julianne Moore with a husband (Dennis Quaid) no longer able to deny his homosexuality and a potential interracial and class-crossing romance with a sensitive black gardener (Dennis Haysbert). But save for the overt mention of homosexuality, Sirk's critiques of narrowmindedness covered all of this ground before. So Haynes' movie veers on postmodern pointlessness; it's one step above Gus Van Sant's Psycho remake. (At Copley Place, Kendall Square and suburbs.)

Gangs of New York ★★
Daniel Day Lewis is the epitome of a charismatic villain in Martin Scorsese's long-awaited 19th-century story. With his swagger, sass and quick wit, this streetfighting, political wheeler-dealer makes you feel the lure of evil. So why is this epic still just a lot of sound and fury signifying nothing but production design and more production design? Maybe it's the familiar this-time-it's-personal plot with Leonardo DiCaprio as an Irish-American returning to the Lower East Side to wreak vengeance on Lewis, who killed his dad (Liam Neeson). Maybe it's the waste of using Cameron Diaz as the woman each man covets. Scorsese seems to pay more attention to minute historical detail than to the big picture, and the movie just sits there, unsure of what it's all about. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Just Married ★★
It must be fear of being a chick flick that causes this romantic comedy to inject toilet humor at just about every opportunity. Too bad, too, because Brittany Murphy and Ashton Kutcher have an appealing chemistry together. But this story of their nightmarish honeymoon in Europe is too lazy to offer much more than stock characters, unoriginal gags (we all already saw a dog dive out a window in There's Something About Mary) and fart jokes. Director Shawn Levy's first movie, Big Fat Liar, worked wonders with so-so material, but this one is as so-so as it gets. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Lord of the Rings: The Two Towers ★½
A whole lotta Dungeons & Dragons mumbo-jumbo writ bombastically large. This series has had close to six hours to make me care about anything happening in it, and I still don't care a lick. Frodo can go bury the ring in the ground and go for a swim, for all I care. He, Gandalf and all the rest are back—including the addition of Miranda Otto (Love Serenade) and Brad Dourif (Child's Play) to the cast—but it's still as plodding and dull as the first film. Like the Harry Potter series, it crams in a lot, yet devotes little energy to making all those events meaningful. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Narc ★★
Writer-director Joe Carnahan's thriller starts as a stylish, lean police story in which disgraced undercover cop Jason Patric is asked back to the force to help high-strung detective Ray Liotta find the killer of another undercover narcotics cop. But instead of coming together coherently and dramatically, such elements as the undercover cop's frazzled mental state, the high-strung detective's brutality and the facts of the murder case just fizzle apart. And in its attempt to upend our perspective on one of the main characters, the ending sports a very dubious morality. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

The Pianist ★★★
It's the little moments in Roman Polanski's Holocaust drama that make it work, like when a hungry family of six on their way to a concentration camp matter-of-factly carve up and share a small piece of candy. Based on the memoirs of late Polish musician and Holocaust survivor Wladyslaw Szpilman, played here by Adrien Brody, the movie powerfully shows the gradual whittling away of Polish Jews' human rights (and humanity) once the Nazis invaded in 1939. It also details how the title character managed to stay alive, through being stripped of rights and crammed into the Warsaw ghetto, seeing his family deported to concentration camps, and hiding out for months at a time while locked into apartments the Nazis think are empty. For better or worse, the hero is a passive character who says little; but his path through history is involving. (At Copley Place, Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and West Newton.)

Talk to Her ★★
Long after Pedro Almodovar was the hot European director, the Spaniard's movies remain interesting yet less involving. As usual, his latest has saturated colors and saturated emotions. It centers around two men involved in relationships with women who are comatose: a male nurse (Javier Camara) infatuated with his patient (Leonor Waitling), and a writer (Dario Grandinetti) whose matador lover (Rosario Flores) has been gored by a bull. If Almodovar hopes to wring pathos out of the nearly asexual nurse's love for his patient, he fails. He also fails to convince you that the journalist would become the nurse's loyal ally, especially when the nurse's "love" turns extreme. (At Kendall Square and Coolidge Corner.)

The 25th Hour ★★
There are some interesting elements to Spike Lee's latest—including Edward Norton's protagonist and the setting of a post-9/11 wounded New York City—but the story never really comes together. Norton plays a drug dealer sorting out his life before he starts serving a prison sentence, and those around him include girlfriend Rosario Dawson, buddies Barry Pepper and Philip Seymour Hoffman and dad Brian Cox. The relationships among the characters just aren't that convincing—the buddies don't feel like buddies, the

CHEMISTRY SET

Boston's eclectic Either/Orchestra refashions its bond with free-jazz pioneer John Tchicai

BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

On the afternoon that the 2003 Grammy nominations are announced, Russ Gershon of the Either/Orchestra is counting back 10 years to the day, when he heard that one of his arrangements for the Boston-based band had been nominated for a Grammy. But that's not Gershon's only memory from that fateful day in 1993. On that same evening, the Either/Orchestra shared the stage at the Institute of Contemporary Art with saxophone icon John Tchicai.

"The thing about John is he has incredible charisma as a person and a player," the Either/Orchestra leader says of Tchicai (pronounced Chee-KAI), who played on John Coltrane's 1965 free-jazz landmark Ascension. "I feel like he brought us to places we haven't gone before with his music and his presence. That concert we did with him was one of my favorites that I've ever been involved with. It was a special night."

Alas, Either/Orchestra is not vying for a Grammy this time around. But the group is returning to the ICA with Tchicai Feb. 1, to celebrate the 10th anniversary of both that last meeting and the existence of the Boston Creative Music Alliance, the organizer of both concerts.

"That's kinda weird to me that it could have been 10 years since anything happened," jokes Gershon, 43, who has led various lineups of Either/Orchestra for 17 years. "Since 1985, I feel the jazz world has come in our direction quite a bit," he says from his Somerville office. "The whole attempt to connect the 'young lions' neo-mainstream thing with fusion, with the avant-garde, there was no one doing it. I felt we were a little ahead of our time, trying to include [Duke] Ellington and electric Miles [Davis] and rock stuff and whatever else we could put into the same repertoire.

The Either/Orchestra and saxophone great John Tchicai are collaborating for the first time in 10 years.

"In the early days, we were more inclined to put together dissimilar things in a collage-like way, like playing with a chemistry set and seeing if you can make something blow up," says Gershon, whose group also plays the Regattabar March 4.

"Now, maybe because I've gotten older and I've digested my influences or the personalities of the players more, I try to create pieces that are more consistent from beginning to end, or at least the juxtapositions are a little more subtle or controlled," he says. "It used to be like I was dealing with raw, wild colors, and slapping them together. Now I feel like I've learned how to mix paint better."

The results are impressive on both the band's new CD, Afro-Cubism, and its acclaimed predecessor, More Beautiful Than Death. Both showcase the 10-piece ensemble's shift into Afro-Cuban rhythms and Ethiopian pop from the '60s and '70s, buoyed by the Latin American drive of Surinam-bred drummer Harvey Wirht and Dominican conga player Vincente Lebron.

"A band is never better than its drummer," says saxophonist Gershon, whose group boasts such alumni as drummers Matt Wilson and Morphine co-founder Jerome Deupree, as well as keyboardist John Medeski, trombonist Josh Roseman and Club d'Elf/Natraj bassist Mike Rivard. "The Latin thing has gotten so much stronger based on the drummers we have now."

Besides a jazz-slanted companion to Afro-Cubism that the Either/Orchestra will release later this year, the ensemble is working on an entire CD of Ethiopian music. It's slated for a label headed by the producer of Ethiopian Groove, an album given to Gershon by Mark Sandman, the late leader of Morphine, which first recorded for Gershon's Accurate label. The 16-year-old label now has nearly 100 titles, including discs by Medeski Martin & Wood, the Jazz Mandolin Project and Dominique Eade, in addition to Either/Orchestra.

Tchicai is preparing four new pieces for the ICA concert and says he likes the African style Either/Orchestra is exploring. "I've tried to go in the same direction," says Tchicai, 66, from his home in France. "Of course all of the pieces are arranged in different kinds of ways. I always try to make a nice mixture of moods and ways to improvise."

"John obviously came up during the free-jazz '60s, but he's also very in touch with African music," Gershon says of the elder saxophonist, whose parents were Congolese and Danish. "But he also has a real European touch in his music. Some of it sounds like cabaret or classically influenced music."

Connecticut native Gershon traces his own eclecticism to his teenage years, when he saw concerts as diverse as Sly and the Family Stone and Tchicai's free-jazz peer Pharoah Sanders.

"I don't know if I had an agenda so much as a set of influences and a desire to honor all of them when I started this band," he says. "Basically, it was what turned me on. That was always my rule of thumb, and it still is." iB

The Sadies crossbreed their country genes with punk and surf for a sound all their own.

Band of Brothers

The Sadies are taking over the family business

Whether by chance or pedigree the Good brothers, Dallas and Travis, are making good on the family name. Their dad, Bruce, and uncles Brian and Larry are one of Canada's most prominent bands of brothers, the legendary country/bluegrass outfit the Good Brothers. Their mother, Margaret, got her start singing back-up for a country-and-western variety show on Canadian television before lending her heartrending voice to two generations of Goods, her husband's act, and later her sons' band, the Sadies.

"I was fully aware of what being a musician meant at an early age, the sacrifices, the pros and cons," says Dallas of his upbringing. He admits, though, that he didn't begin to embrace the family business until nearing his teens. "I wasn't even interested in playing guitar until I was 12 years old and learning Black Flag songs."

The brothers paid their dues, separately, in a variety of punk and rock 'n' roll bands before joining forces in the Sadies nine years ago—along with upright bassist Sean Dean and drummer Mike Belitsky—to improve on the family recipe for traditional country music with a genre-blurring melange of surf, psychedelia and rock 'n' roll. A fever-pitched tour schedule and a series of increasingly impressive albums have earned the band a growing audience in alt-country circles and beyond. This past November, the Sadies released their fourth long-player, Stories Often Told. On Stories their sound falls halfway between the Byrds circa Sweetheart of the Rodeo and the score to a classic western (around the point in the film when some unlucky cowpokes are fixing to get "regulated upon"). "It's safe to say this record is a lot darker than anything we've put out in the past," says Dallas.

Don't peg these boys as an overwrought alt-country act, though. Do expect them to raise the barn when they ride into Cambridge Jan. 30. T.T. the Bear's Place, 10 Brookline St., Cambridge (617-492-2327). 9 pm, $10.—Daniel Schulman

Leather and Lace

The Roxy is the first stop on the Erotic Ball tour

Now that the season of Santa Claus is behind us, you can stop worrying about that "naughty or nice" business for another 11 months. So why not indulge your naughty side on Jan. 23, when the kick-off party for the Erotic Ball 2003 tour takes place at the Roxy? Boston-based Kaos Productions is teaming up with Hubba Hubba of Cambridge and Video Warehouse of Peabody to transform one of Boston's biggest clubs into an adult playground for the night. It's all in good fun, but curious and experienced partygoers alike are encouraged to come dressed to impress.

That bondage costume you bought last year—the one that came with the riding crop and fuzzy handcuffs—has probably just been collecting dust in your closet since Halloween. The Roxy guarantees VIP treatment—as well as a chance to win prizes and be crowned king or queen of the ball—to all those who arrive wearing leather and lace.

Boston is the first stop on the Erotic Ball's 12-city tour of the Northeast. Organizers promise a unique experience, complete with mind-blowing visual effects, the Roxy dancers, special "erotic" performances, giveaways, and of course, the sexiest clubbing soundtrack this side of Berlin. Boston DJ Paul Dailey will lay down his signature hard-edged techno sound. Don't expect to see Dailey provocatively dressed, however. He explains, "Although I'll be happy to give out plenty of musical spankings, I don't think anyone wants to see me in leather or lace." Local funky house DJ Michael Knyte will warm up the crowd. 275 Tremont St., Boston (617-338-7699). 9pm-2am. 21+. Tickets are available at Strawberries outlets for $22 and a limited number of tickets will be available at the door.—Daniel Spurling

Popcorn Platform
The date: Dec. 10. The place: a very unromantic, popcorn-smelling T platform at Government Center. You are 5' 10", have long, straight blond-brown hair and very possibly the bluest eyes and fairest skin that that T platform has ever seen (chuckle). I had a leather jacket and a backpack. We were standing there waiting for the Lechmere train, which pulled up and was packed with people. We both mumbled something about the chances of fitting on board. My backpack, the crush of people and my quick ride to Haymarket prevented me from doing anything but sharing a quick smile with you as we both made it on the train. I'll buy the popcorn if I am lucky enough to get the chance!

The Day After Thanksgiving
I saw you on the Green Line Lechmere train at Kenmore the day after Turkey Day. You were wearing lowtop Chuck Taylors, had red hair, a tan jacket and deep eyes. I was the guy across from you in the hinge section: tall, black hair, glasses, black jacket. We made eye contact a few times but I wasn't sure if you were just looking around or looking at me. You were reading a book—I couldn't see what. I got off the train at Haymarket and we definitely looked right at each other for what seemed like a long time. I was a fool and didn't say anything. I know this is a shot in the dark but I hope you see it. I'd love to get together for coffee or a drink.

Countdown
You: a college student from the midwest who was going to spend her first summer in Boston. Me: college student from "just outside Boston" who was also going to spend summer in the city. Wes Anderson and Beyond
Dec. 14, Tea Tray in the Sky, Arlington. You: with a friend or possibly a blind date. Me: On a blind date talking about Wes Anderson movies. You smiled and mentioned how much you like Wes Anderson movies, also. Sorry, but I couldn't help but continue to eaves drop on your conversation—it seems we both have an appreciation for Edward Burns movies. I wanted to give you my number, but the timing was wrong.

Flight 333, Nashville to Providence Dec. 18
I flew recently on Flight 333 and met a man I can't forget. We talked about my Christmas tree and he said he didn't have that tradition. I thought he said he worked with wood products. The last time I flew this flight the plane nearly crashed and something triggered a panic attack and stopped me from getting to know this incredible man. I wanted so much to continue getting to know this gentleman but was overcome by the panic of flying. If I had another chance I would like so much to meet him again. His name was Phillip. He may have been the most attractive man I've ever seen—so charming and debonaire. If you know him (or are him) please e-mail.

Breathtaking at Harvard.
December 18, I think? I walked onto the Red line at Park Street and there you were! Standing about 5' 7", wearing a white lace hat that covered your beautiful auburn hair. We both got off at Harvard station and I knew that I had to tell you what an impression you had made on me. Just as we passed through the turnstile I went up to you and said "I need to let you know that you are absolutely breathtaking!" You thanked me for making your day and then we each went our separate ways. I went back up to Harvard Square to see if I could find you for a cup of coffee, but alas, you were nowhere to be found. If you are reading this, I would love to get that cup of coffee and get to know you. I am certain if I get the chance to know you much more than your beauty will take my breathe away.

A Story
We flirt profusely. We exchange short, banal e-mails. Meet for coffee, dinner. Inevitably end up at his place or mine. Indulge in each other's flesh. More dinner, phone calls, e-mails. We sleep together. There are other boys, other men, new flirtations. My mind is elsewhere. Two years later: I cook dinner for him. I sleep at his place, he stays at mine. But he doesn't sleep well in my bed. I exchange trivial e-mails with new guys. Go for coffee or a movie. We indulge in each other's flesh—go all the way. I miss his body, the familiarity, his arms, his car. Tell myself that there are other guys, more creative and exciting guys, ones who appreciate me. But they're too tall, too short, call too often, don't pay enough attention. My mind is elsewhere, dreaming of him, the amalgamation of everyone I've met and everyone I want to know. He knows the answer before I ask the question, he gives me what I need, disappears when it becomes too much and re-appears when I desire him. He completes me.

Swinging Johnson, Dec. 12
I saw you in the back room of The Burren in Somerville having some dinner with a couple of your girlfriends. You: brunette with a pony tail, wearing jeans, with high cheekbones and beautiful eyes and smile. Me: dark blond curly hair and taller than you. I was wearing a white button-down shirt with a black overcoat, hanging with my friend. After dinner, we stayed and watched the Swinging Johnsons, but all I could do was watch you. You had the most amazing smile. I think you caught my eye a few times, but you were busy talking to your friend (boyfriend, brother?). He looked like a friend but maybe you can tell me more? I would do anything to see you again.

Rockie Horoscope

JANUARY 22 – FEBRUARY 4, 2002

AQUARIUS JANUARY 21-FEBRUARY 18

Your season in the sun began on the 20th when the sun entered Aquarius and your will-to-power was unleashed. The physical manifestation of your good intentions becomes apparent while take-action Mars in your midheaven is lit midweek. Blazing trails, setting records and defending your beliefs can make you a hero to your boss, parents, even a public official. Ever consider running for office? That altruistic, "we, the people" Aquarian vibe is very strong right now; find a way to make it work on your behalf as well as for the greater good.

PISCES

FEBRUARY 19-MARCH 19

As soon as Mercury turns direct, why not sign up for a class that can bring you much pleasure as well as an opportunity to eventually make quite a bit of money? Recreational and risky activities would fill the bill, e.g., producing a play abroad or catering celebratory events. While Venus in your Sagittarius midheaven allies with protective Jupiter, the world is your oyster, plus the two planets will ensure there are pretty people around offering fun opportunities. Ignore any negativity coming from the family.

ARIES

MARCH 20-APRIL 19

As of tonight (1/22), Mercury stops reevaluating the path you've been following since mid-December. However, the Messenger probably needs more time before deciding what your next career move should be or which person will present it. Although you may be rarin' to go because your Mars ruler is in high-spirited Sagittarius, don't allow your restlessness or enthusiasm to distort what would be the correct timing of an important event. And when would that be? Around the Chinese New Year, when you become divinely inspired.

TAURUS

APRIL 20-MAY 20

Bulls may get an unusual opportunity to make a killing when your Venus ruler merges with powerful Pluto around the 25th. But if you aren't connected to big business moguls or to the usual suspects in the underworld, try laying a trap for a would-be lover. No planetary aspect is quite as seductive as the annual meeting of magnetic Venus and passionate Pluto, nor as clandestine. Add the extra dollop of good fortune Jupiter is currently bestowing and you truly are a lucky stiff. Why not play it for all it's worth?

GEMINI

MAY 21-JUNE 20

You would think that the minute your Mercury ruler comes out of its retrograde slump Wednesday night, you'd jump at the chance to take action, even if it's rash or ill-advised. Well, now you've been warned to wait until you see some semblance of a workable plan taking shape. Your first inkling of what lies ahead should come with the new moon and the Chinese New Year, but you may have to bide your time until Mercury returns to the position it held before it flipped on Jan. 2. How does a Feb. 11 launch date sound?

CANCER

JUNE 21-JULY 22

You might as well concentrate on the relationships that are already in the works rather than chase after one you can't lay claim to...yet. While perceptive Mercury in Capricorn reveals what was really happening over the holidays, as well as what's coming up next, you'll probably have to wait until affectionate Venus gets to your marriage sign in early February before your social life becomes as good as it gets. But for now, go with the flow emanating from lucky Jupiter in your Leo money house. Indulge in a little luxury.

LEO

JULY 23-AUGUST 22

The action picks up, not only because Mercury is finally moving forward, but because your sun ruler is in Aquarius, the sign of your cosmic mate. Does that mean the elusive butterfly of love is about to appear? Not exactly. But you might find a gig you love, a co-worker you can really relate to or a charity that tears at your heartstrings. In the next few weeks, you'll participate in an especially meaningful (to you) event, be inspired by a poetic soul and willingly sacrifice something you hold dear.

VIRGO

AUGUST 23-SEPTEMBER 22

The latest changes are subtle, but they could be substantial. While the sun's trip through Aquarius can turn all of us into humanitarians and/or rebels, its free-wheeling attitude is sure to spice up your love life. However, Virgins may still idealize the object of their affections and perhaps fall for a scam artist. Your Mercury ruler's flip from retro to direct on the 22nd sets your focus on the future and your thoughts on mending family affairs or whatever else in the house isn't up to snuff.

LIBRA

SEPTEMBER 23-OCTOBER 22

Home might not be exactly where your heart is at the moment, but it is where a number of planets are gathering. January wouldn't be a bad time for a family reunion or a big Super Bowl party with neighbors, friends and fans in your clan. Once Mercury flips on the 22nd, you can buy the stuff you've had your eye on since the post-Christmas sales began. If your employer is fairly generous and has sufficient foresight, this would be a good time to ask for a raise. It's an iffy proposition, but right now Lady Luck is on your side.

SCORPIO

OCTOBER 23-NOVEMBER 21

Some call it a windfall, some karmic payback, some the chickens coming home to roost and lay those golden eggs. No matter which form your good fortune takes, thank the rewarding trine aspect between prosperous Jupiter in your career midheaven and Venus in your house of income earned. Performers and gamblers can do especially well, but anyone involved with entertainment, art and beautiful merchandise, e.g. lingerie, will benefit. You'll enjoy it all, especially the lingerie, while loving Venus and your sexy Pluto co-ruler merge.

SAGITTARIUS

NOVEMBER 22-DECEMBER 21

As your magnanimous Jupiter ruler reaches out to magnetic Venus in your sign this week, the gods of winter can bestow their real gifts. You're getting a double helping of good luck and good looks this year, so, damn it, be appreciative! Don't assume the rewards will continue to be as big or as satisfying after Jupiter vacates fiery, friendly Leo. Next year's holiday season could be more challenging, more family-centered and more frugal, too. But for the immediate future, until the Chinese New Year, let's overeat, drink and be merry.

CAPRICORN

DECEMBER 22-JANUARY 20

Hanging with friends and participating in official group interaction, e.g., union elections, can suddenly take up a lot more of your time. Which of your many interests will you actively pursue with these folks? Human rights or an online book club? Something sexy is bound to come out of this project, simply because flirtatious Venus and passionate Pluto are headed for their yearly tryst. Make sure you keep a secret that you've uncovered to yourself, especially if a co-worker is involved or someone's health is under scrutiny.

Improper Sightings

Unlike the rest of your friends, we want to see the photos from your next trip.

Where do you take us? Send us a picture of you or a friend, or better yet, someone famous reading THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN and tell us where you were. Since we want your feedback on the rest of the magazine, too, submissions that include a letter expressing your opinion will really get our attention.

Alison Caiazza and Michael Flippin participate in the Adult Kangaroo Literacy Program somewhere in Australia.

Meghan Maloney graced Graceland with a copy of the IMPROPER. She left Elvis a peanut butter and banana sandwich to eat when he comes out of hiding.

You know what they say about statues in Bratislava, Slovakia: They're rude. Steve McGinn, the subject of this picture, tells us that there's a nearby statue with his elbows on the table.

Sheila O'Connor and Mark Taylor found this IMPROPER while diving off Roataan, Honduras. It was aboard a Spanish galleon, along with lots of pirate skeletons and, of course, booty.

Khalid Amir (right) and his trusty driver, Abdul, take a relaxing break in the Atlas Mountains, between Marrakesh and Ouarzazate in Morocco. Ouarzazate craftsmen are known for their amazing invisible chairs.

A HERCULEAN ACHIEVEMENT...

It might seem like 2,435 years is an awfully long time to wait for a theatrical debut, but it was worth the delay when the American Repertory Theatre staged the American premiere of Peter Sellars' production of the classic Euripides play The Children of Herakles.

On hand for the historic opening night was an impressive array of glitterati drawn from the worlds of the arts, academia and big piles of money. Spotted at the pre-performance reception at the Loeb Drama Center: the puckish Sellars himself; theatrical visionaries Bob Woodruff and David Wheeler; über-philanthropists Lee Day Gillespie, Hod and Cassandra Irvine and George and Liz Krupp; symphonic composer Osvaldo Golijov; retired Harvard panjandrum Henry Rosovsky; real estate magnate Tony Pangaro; tech gazillionaire Greg Carr and the babe-a-licious Nicol Golez; physician and social activist Len Rubinstein; printing poobah Steve Grossman and his drama professor wife, Barbara; ART factotums Rob Orchard and Gideon Lester; ART board member and outgoing Armani honcha Kathy Connor; not-going-anywhere Chanel head Barbara Lemperly Grant; beloved ART pair Jan and Jeremy Geidt; and so on and so forth down a very swishy guest list.

After a delicious buffet catered by Sabur and a few words from the artists—like Sellars' observation that "art is not dessert; it's the main course"—attendees took their seats to watch a play that was written more than two millennia ago but deals with themes (war refugees) so contemporary it could have been penned yesterday.

All in all, an edifying evening, and one that boggles the mind when you consider that it took this long for a major classic to reach the American public, while The Phantom of the Opera is still on tour.

THE GIRL WHO CAME TO DINNER...

An unexpected guest threw a monkey wrench into the plans that super-cute foodie couple Jill and Michael Leviton had so carefully laid for the unveiling of the new Monday night prix fixe menu at their swanky suburban restaurant, Lumiere.

Jill, seven months pregnant, had intended to be there, in all her big-bellied splendor. After all, she's the front-of-the-room face who charms and schmoozes the heavy hitters and big shots who dine at the elegant West Newton eatery. (A sample snatch of conversation overheard on a banquette: "There was $230,000 in my checking account, which is odd, since I never keep more than $50,000 or $60,000 in it.")

However, on Jan. 3, Jill delivered a baby girl, six weeks early. Her name: Isadora.

Mother and daughter are doing fine, but Michael was left to hold down the fort alone, as the host's stand got crowded with baby gifts and congratulations for the new Dad added to the normal shower of compliments about his cooking. Mazel tov to the new parents, and welcome to Isadora. We hope she has her mother's stunning beauty and her old man's talent in the kitchen.

CHATEAU WHATEVER...

You'd think that immediately following the holidays, a feeding frenzy of wine and food would hold limited appeal, but the opening of the 14th annual Boston Wine Festival attracted upwards of 500 wine connoisseurs and enthusiasts, not to mention a few wine bores, as well as most of the card-carrying members of the free-shrimp circuit.

Seen sipping and grazing in the Boston Harbor Hotel's spectacular Wharf Room, which overlooks the water, were such stalwarts of the social scene as power broker and PR czar George Regan; curvaceous WB producer and high-powered hottie Michele Cotler; the NAACP's affable head honcho Lenny Akins; surgical hotshot Dr. Stanley Tam and his wife, Laura; Boston Symphony Orchestra bad boy Sean Kerrigan; glamorous restaurant flack Lynn Kortenhaus; Back Bay junior socialite Wendy Pierce; Playbill publisher Tim Montgomery and his stunning spouse, Donna; MIT development bigwig Martha Ballard and her other half, restaurant construction mogul Steve Matthews; do-gooder and fashion plate Debbie First; a man who'd just recovered from surgery and said, "I have to admit—OxyContin is great"; and one Boston Magazine employee who inexplicably insists on looking like Adam Sandler as Opera Man.

With a mellow jazz combo tickling their eardrums, guests stood in line for a sip of over 50 wines from around the world or snaked through the bacchanalian buffet, and the new year's resolutions to shed those extra pounds from 2002 went the way of all good intentions: straight to hell.

"It's a nice party," said one attendee, summing up the evening, "but I wish there was a little less wine talk. My feeling is, shut up and pour."IB

At the Boston Wine Festival, far left: Diana Nicosia and Arthur Bauernfeind. Center, from top: Colette Sagar and Jason O'Brien; David Patrick and Cherie Maynard. Right, from top: Debbie First, Lynn Kortenhaus, Susan Withrow and Wendy Pierce; Neil and Yoshika Sherring and Ed Costa; Paul Jacques, Peter and Margo Shields, and Wendy Jacques.

IT'S HARD TO BELIEVE THAT LOU MERLONI HASN'T FOUND MS. RIGHT. FROM WHAT YOU WROTE ABOUT HIM IN THE ARTICLE, HE SOUNDS FANTASTIC (AND CERTAINLY NOT JUST BECAUSE HE'S A RED SOX PLAYER).

—LYNN HIGGINS
CAMBRIDGE

THEY LOVE US, THEY LOVE US NOT

I just wanted to tell you that I thought your latest issue was great. It's comforting to see that there are so many other singles around Boston. I'm 29, female and single and I consider myself to be an eligible bachelorette. It's hard to believe that Lou Merloni hasn't found Ms. Right. From what you wrote about him in the article, he sounds fantastic (and certainly not just because he's a Red Sox player). Please pass the word along to him that someone in Cambridge thinks he's absolutely handsome and quite a catch—it won't take him much longer to meet someone!

—LYNN HIGGINS
Cambridge

Well, you did it again, IMPROPER. You completely missed the boat. With all the excitement surrounding the popular Bachelor and Bachelorette TV shows, you resurrected your own rendition and bored us all to death. While the photos were nice and the Dating Game backdrop impeccable, you failed to recognize the reason those shows are so popular: They strike a chord with us because they feature everyday people, schmucks like me that ride the subway and wait in line to buy coffee and bagels. The reason reality shows capture our imagination is because we see ourselves in those people, our searches for happiness and love. Thanks for showing us that pro baseball and hockey players, sports anchors, famous chefs and real estate tycoons are "a great catch." Fine work. Next year why don't you add a couple of Calvin Klein models and Matt Damon into the mix. Your promotion of the event called on people throughout Boston to nominate their "favorite local single guy or gal." I figured your article would set out to show that the greatest city in the world is filled with wonderful and attainable people. Apparently not.

Reality TV is popular because it makes us all feel like our everyday lives aren't so boring after all, and our struggles to find happiness are interesting and worthy of a show. Maybe next year you'll deem them worthy of 10 pages.

—ANTHONY DETTORE

DEFINITION OF FAINT PRAISE

I just wanted to let Ezra know that he finally wrote a funny column. The one in which he advertised for a new apartment-mate was mildly amusing, but "Meet Lance" [Ezra, Jan. 8] actually made me laugh. And I totally concur with the comments regarding changing the shower back to tub setting and the importance of good remote control skills. By the way, for the last several years my official New York Mets calendars have featured roughly 50 percent long-gone players. Your whining about the Red Sox [The Word, Jan. 8] is nothing!

—LAURA MANDAT

CORRECTION

We misidentified the name of a health club in our Jan. 8 and Jan. 22 issues. The correct name is Wellbridge Athletic Club.

FROM THE EDITOR

THE BIG DAY

Everything I know about weddings I learned on Martha's Vineyard. Well, that's hyperbole, but though I've attended my fair share of weddings and even participated in a few, the summer that I worked at an inn on the Vineyard gave me a behind-the-scenes education in the art of weddings.

We hosted a wedding or two almost every weekend at the inn, and they ranged from small, family-only affairs to large celebrations with big white tents pitched in the apple orchard. Though the details—vows, food, music, flowers—differed, and though all the brides and grooms were strangers to me, every ceremony (it sounds embarassingly romantic to say it) carried a sense of hope and excitement that added sweetness to my summer.

Certainly this rite of passage has inspired art and literature, music and film—and it inspires this annual issue of the IMPROPER.

First in our wedding-themed lineup is Julie Short's feature story on New England–style weddings. Wedding planners, caterers, florists and local brides and grooms all weigh in with tips for bringing New England's distinct flavor into your big day. (Even Boston's sainted Dunkin' Donuts and Red Sox could be featured in your wedding.)

In five pages devoted to wedding gowns, the IMPROPER's forward-thinking fashion goddess, Samantha House, describes the latest trends and shows you—in gorgeous color—that white is no longer the only option.

Men (I hope we haven't lost you yet), there's something for you here too: 1. Barney Beal's guide to buying the all-important nuptial hardware, and 2. Ezra's Dyer's feature on how to throw a Vegas-style bachelor party without leaving New England. (Unfortunately, you have to brave the first to qualify as guest of honor for the second.)

And finally, in defiance of all of the above, we've got Erin Hagedorn's feature on the shocking topic of unmarried cohabitation. One Boston couple has literally made a career out of it, and they've got advice—and some controversial views.

Whether you're married, single, or somewhere in between, we hope you enjoy.

Standing Ovation

Teatro, the swankiest new addition to the Ladder District, is perfect for the not-quite-Mistral crowd: the martini-sipping young professional who has yet to move to the 'burbs (or change a diaper, for that matter), who doesn't make dinner reservations in advance and who's the first to find out about the city's trendy new bars and restaurants. It makes sense, since Mistral chef/owner Jamie Mammano, who knows the Mistral crowd inside and out, created Teatro—a younger, hipper and less expensive version of his South End hot spot.

Instead of Mistral's Provençal-inspired dishes, Teatro serves Italian cuisine. There's also no valet, no table linens, no reservations and, yes, you can wear jeans and sneakers if you're on the way to the Loews Theatre next door, or a little black dress and heels if you're catching a show at the Colonial. "We want this to be a great place to come and eat," says general manager Jeff Iovino, who compares Teatro to the Franklin Cafe in the South End. "Before now, there was no place like that in this area—non-intimidating and casual, with really good food that's affordable." The menu of northern and southern Italian cuisine by chef Robert Jean includes pasta, fish and meat, and entrees range from $12 to $21. An even better deal is the wine list, which has more than 20 wines by the glass ($6 to $10) or carafe ($12 to $20).

Overlooking Boston Common, Teatro's limestone walls, gold-painted plaster moldings, bejeweled spiral chandeliers, domed ceiling and soft blue lighting creates a theatrical atmosphere (which is appropriate considering its name means "theater" in Italian). It's a perfect place to come in from the cold and warm up with a Hot Tub: a Doli martini with Chambourd and fresh pineapple, topped off with champagne. 177 Tremont St., Boston (617-778-6841).

Brighton Shines

What would compel nearly 30 young professionals decked out in skimpy late-night finery to stand in line outside a bar in 16-degree weather on Market Street in Brighton?

The answer is SoHo, the latest endeavor by Jon Cronin, owner of the Black Rhino, Aqua, the Playwright and Boston Beer Garden, among others. This mammoth new restaurant seats 300 and dishes up everything from tikki masala to buffalo wings—but with a capacity of 600 on two floors, it's also a bar, lounge and club all in one.

It seems as if just yesterday Brighton was the place to go when you wanted to throw on some jeans and get a cheap drink. Apparently, the end of that era may be in sight. Like the new Tonic on Comm. Ave. or Devlin's on Washington Street, SoHo is upscale, attracting city folks normally found at downtown bars. "Brighton Center is up-and-coming," says Cronin. "I predict it will be the next Davis Square." We can only imagine how far the line will stretch when SoHo gets its entertainment license. 386 Market St., Brighton (617-562-6000).

Winter Doldrums

Next month speed enthusiasts can give luging a try at Waterville Valley.

It's that time of year again... The football season is over, and spring training and March Madness seem far off. So you may as well get out of the house and take advantage of the frigorific temperatures we've been having by hitting the slopes, which are in their best shape in years. At Killington, you can catch the craziest airing out in the Budweiser All-Star Aerial Show, Feb. 8-9, as well as get your fix of colorful explosions at the Presidents' weekend fireworks Feb. 15. Waterville Valley serves up the Glen Plake Hotdog Tour Feb. 15, offering the chance to ski and party with the iconic mohawk-wearing madman. The Hotdog Tour, which includes a hotdog-eating contest, also hits Loon and Cranmore Feb. 16 and 17, respectively. At ever-chilly Whiteface Feb. 8-9 (and also at Waterville Valley March 1-2) the Verizon Luge Challenge lets speed freaks take luge lessons and then hurl themselves down a snowy track constructed on the mountain. This event is free, regardless of whether you buy a lift ticket. And if you and your honey consider yourselves slalom superstars, Feb. 15 the Sugarbush Run for the Roses offers a dozen roses and dinner for two to the couple with the fastest combined time in the slalom course. Stowe has a similar event Feb. 14.

If none of that gets you out for some winter hijinks, we suppose you can always watch Destination Outdoors reruns on ESPN2 until the Sox get fired up for spring training.—Ezra Dyer

•Missing Morgan... For the past several years, Boston-based electronic-music artist Morgan Page has been building a name for himself around the world. As he winds up his senior year at Emerson College, the Vermont native is considering a move to California. Last year, Page released Drifting into View, a full-length debut album on Vancouver-based label Nordic Trax. "All I Need," the album's first 12-inch single, has finally arrived. The record features a pair of remixes by veteran West Coast dub-house maestro Brian "Halo" Varga, and is flying off store shelves.

•Café Sounds... With the release of Visage Feb. 4, brothers Félix and Lewis Cutillo proudly launch EuropaPop, a new local music label. Compiled and mixed by Félix, the Visage CD features 14 songs that span everything from the moody lounge sound of Yonderboi's "Pabadam" to the deep-house pulse of Kevin Yost's "7th Heaven." Experience Félix Cutillo live in the mix every Wednesday at Pravda 116's International Night.

•Oasis... Every Wednesday night, Analog Lounge presents the relaxed side of things upstairs at Vertigo. Those in search of a soothing midweek oasis can settle down in one of the plush booths and enjoy a drink while residents Gregory Blake, Special Pete, Peter Ellis and Pete Yagmin spin deep trance, progressive house and chilled grooves. Downstairs, Anitya residents Mathwin, Dino and Dave Henshaw provide a psychedelic trance soundtrack for the dance floor.

•Hip-Hop to Bruno... If you've checked out a hip-hop night in Boston at any time in recent years, there's a good chance that DJ Bruno had a hand in it. On Feb. 18, Bruno celebrates 15 years of hip-hop in Boston with a night of spinning classics that stretch back to the '80s. Fat Tuesdays, the longest running hip-hop night in Boston, held at Bill's Bar, hosts the anniversary bash.

Houston's is open for business in Faneuil Hall.

Roger That, Houston's... Faneuil Hall unveiled the most recent addition to its eclectic bevy of boîtes Dec. 9—and no, it's not another Todd English incarnation. Houston's (best known on the East Coast for its trendy outpost in D.C.'s Georgetown) set up shop in the space that previously housed Houlihan's. The chain's made-from-scratch American dishes can be sampled at 43 other locations nationally, but this is its first foray in the Northeast. Keep an eye out for the electric-blue lights beckoning from the Marketplace. 60 State St., Boston (617-573-9777).

Sugar 'n' Spice... Turns out, the mastermind behind the frozen delights at Cambridge's Christina's Homemade Ice Cream is as much an expert on spices as he is on sweets. Owner Ray Ford recently opened Christina's Spice and Specialty Foods next door. He's been wholesaling spices to restaurants for years and finally decided to dedicate a retail business to what he calls his "addiction." The spice seller now stocks 50 different kinds of chiles, along with rices, oils and exotic extracts. And it doesn't end there—he'll be adding teas, cereals and grains. "The biggest problem now is knowing where to stop," he says. 1261 Cambridge St., Cambridge (617-492-7021).

Maggiano's executive chef James Drake seeks decadent desserts.

Sweet Stuff... If you can bake a pretty mean dessert (Jell-O No Bake doesn't count), the folks at Maggiano's Little Italy want to know about it. Their How Sweet It Is recipe contest seeks the top original desserts in town, and Feb. 9, celebrity sweet tooths will determine the tastiest. The winner gets a goody bag that includes a trip for two to Waterbury, Vt., Valentine's dinner for two at Maggiano's and a year's supply of Ben & Jerry's. The blue-ribbon dessert will be a featured menu item during March, and its sales will benefit Project Bread. Entries are due by midnight Feb. 6.

Romancing the Bean... Cafe au lait might be something of an aphrodisiac these days. A recent survey conducted by Starbucks found that coffeehouses have become popular spots for romantic rendezvous. If you've had a coffee courtship, submit a 250-word essay detailing your affair to the Match Made Over Coffee contest at www.starbucks.com by Feb. 7, and the story deemed most "buzz-worthy" wins a trip for two to Vienna. (Needless to say, your encounter probably shouldn't reference Peet's or Dunkin' Donuts.)—E.H., J.I. and J.S.

AROUND TOWN

Meet Rachael Ray

Rachael Ray, host of the Food Network's 30 Minute Meals and $40 a Day, schooled us in the way of the quick and thrifty after her cooking demo at the Boston Wine Expo Feb. 1-2.

IMPROPER BOSTONIAN: What's the perfect way to spend $40 a day in Boston?

Rachael Ray: You can get a muffin and a cup of coffee at a bakeshop in Faneuil Hall. For lunch, grab a beer at Grendel's Den in Cambridge and then pizza at Cambridge One. Or go to No-Name in South Boston. Then go to Giacomo's in the North End for dinner. That place just blew me away. It had a line around the block. It was great—for only 15 bucks.

IB: What's the best place to shop for food and ingredients in Boston?

RR: A regular grocery store. Patés, imported cheese—all the things I used to buy in the gourmet market—I can find in the regular market now. That's one of the main misconceptions—that you have to spend a lot of money to dine well.

IB: What are your favorite restaurants in Boston?

RR: I think the North End has the best Italian food of any city. I've never been disappointed. In Manhattan, if I want Italian, the last place I go is Little Italy.

IB: What makes Boston different from other cities in terms of lifestyle/eating habits?

RR: New Englanders are good eaters. In New York or L.A., it's 10 or 10:30pm, and they're eating at a club. It's a scene. Bostonians eat from 8-11pm with their elbows on the table, and it's more of an event. You hang out.

IB: What's your favorite place in the world to go for a $40 day?

RR: Forty dollars in Rome goes a really long way. Plus, they have the best gelato in the world.

IB: How about more than $40 a day?

RR: New York. I would pick Mario Batali's Babbo—you can't do Babbo for $40, but it is a treat. It runs about $100 a person, reasonable by New York standards.—Jessica Iredale

SEEN, OVERHEARD OR OTHERWISE BROUGHT TO OUR ATTENTION

Gold Standard... Blue Man Group might seem a far cry from the divas and pop stars who rule the Billboard charts. But it's official—the tight-lipped men in blue have gone gold with their Grammy-nominated debut album, Audio. The Recording Industry Association of America has certified their gold status with Audio's steady rank in the Billboard Top 200 since its 2000 release. But the group isn't resting on its laurels. Its next album, The Complex, drops April 22. We'll see if it meets the gold standard.

Buyer Beware... A new magazine on the street might have certain Boston businesses running for cover. The hot-off-the-presses Boston Consumers' Checkbook is naming names in terms of the best and the worst in the local service industries. From auto repair to cell-phone providers to health care, Checkbook has been giving San Francisco and Washington, D.C., subscribers the skinny on who's legit and who's a rip-off in bi-annual issues geared to those towns. Now Bostonians can be privy to the inside scoop too. $30 for a two-year subscription. (800-213-7283) or www.checkbook.org.

•Americans in Paris... In this horrid season of frostbitten toes and subzero temperatures, most of us are dreaming of a warm escape. While Paris isn't exactly balmy this time of year, it sure beats Boston. Throughout February, if you purchase tickets purchased for the Museum of Fine Arts' Impressions of Light: The French Landscape from Corot to Monet exhibition, you're automatically entered to win a trip for two to the Left Bank. The lucky winners get a first-hand look at what inspired the great Impressionists (617-542-4MDA) or www.mfa.org.

Win a trip to see Cezanne's paintings in Paris from the MFA.

•Conversation Piece... If you notice more than one person on the Red Line reading the same book, James McBride's The Color of Water: A Black Man's Tribute to His White Mother, you're not seeing double. The new citywide book club, Cambridge Reads: Cover to Cover, is the collaborative effort of the Cambridge Center for Adult Education, the Friends of the Library, Cambridge mayor Michael A. Sullivan's office and the Harvard Book Store. The season kicks off March 4 and regular discussions are held through September.

Toast of the Town...The Boston's Beloved Bartender ballots have been pouring into our office these past weeks (adding to the stress levels of our already overworked interns). But keep 'em coming, we say. To vote for your favorite bartender, visit www.improper.com and download a ballot. Be sure to send it back to us by Feb. 20. If your favorite mixer of elixirs gets enough votes, he or she might be featured in our annual Boston's Beloved Bartenders issue, which comes out April 16. Cheers! —E.H., J.I. and J.S.

Good Call

One of the last holdouts joins the cell phone cult

My friends would probably say that I've been in need of a cell phone for quite some time. Being phoneless, I've always been the guy who has to leech someone else's phone to make a call. Despite the pitfalls of this approach (annoying your friends and being called Amish, or contracting ear fungus from public pay phones), the occasional inconvenience never justified joining the cell phone crowd. I figured that having a phone would be nice, but you don't really need one unless you're a surgeon or a prostitute or a pizza guy—someone who needs to be available at all times. If Bin Laden can get by without a cell phone, so can I.

The turning point came a few months ago when I went skiing at Okemo. I was supposed to meet a group of friends at the mountain, but we didn't agree on a meeting time beforehand. Being phoneless, I used an Okemo pay phone to leave a message on my friend's voicemail. When my next credit card bill arrived, I found that my one-minute call cost $25.48. When you're paying that much for a phone call, the conversation should begin with "What are you wearing?" not "Where are you skiing?" Okemo's communications people are still trying to figure out why I was billed at the long-distance rate for the moon, but this whole mess could have been avoided if I'd just had a cell phone. (Not because I would have been able to use it, but because I would have discovered that there was no service and spent my $25 at the bar, which is where I found my friends anyway.)

Did this incident prompt me to finally go out and get a phone? No. But after complaining about my Okemo payphone mugging to anyone who would listen for several weeks, my parents got me a phone for Christmas. I think that my mother, in particular, wants me to have a phone so that if a wheel falls off my car and I crash into a river and I'm attacked by piranha while the current carries me toward a waterfall, I can use my phone to let the rescue crew know where to find my body. She's very into the safety benefits of having a cell phone.

I'm more concerned about the behavioral issues that accompany a cell phone. I can't really mock obnoxious cell phone users if I'm one of them myself. So will I compulsively check my voicemail in public places? Will I worry aloud about how many minutes I have left in my monthly plan? Will I set the 1812 Overture as my personalized ring? Will I get a hands-free microphone and then walk down the street talking into my hands-free microphone but also carrying my phone conspicuously in one hand just so people know I'm not talking to the voices in my head? When I get a call, will I take my phone out of my pocket, look at the caller ID, frown, and put the phone back in my pocket, thus communicating that I don't deign to talk to just anyone? Will I answer calls on the golf course, only to say, "Could I call you right back? I'm putting for birdie." Will I wear my phone on my belt? If it's true that cell phones give you brain cancer, perhaps your belt isn't the best place to keep one, either. But if you think wearing your phone on your belt looks really cool, don't let me stop you, chief.

Behavioral qualms aside, one great thing about having a phone is that people can now reach me. That is, they can reach me assuming my phone is charged up and on my person and I'm within the service area and I hear it ring and decide to answer the call after checking the ID. So really, the chances of reaching me are nearly the same as they'd be if you just yelled my name loudly from wherever you are. But that's a moot point, as after a month of phonership I've found that I get calls about as frequently as a Kentucky dentist. I've had two wrong numbers, both of which I answered with a pathetic eagerness.

PEOPLE CAN NOW REACH ME. THAT IS, THEY CAN REACH ME IF MY PHONE IS CHARGED UP AND I'M WITHIN THE SERVICE AREA AND I HEAR IT RING AND DECIDE TO ANSWER THE CALL AFTER CHECKING THE ID.

Hey "Tom," or should I say, "Mr. Popularity," why don't you tell all your stupid friends to dial the right number next time? I've only got 497 anytime minutes left. iB

You think that's funny?

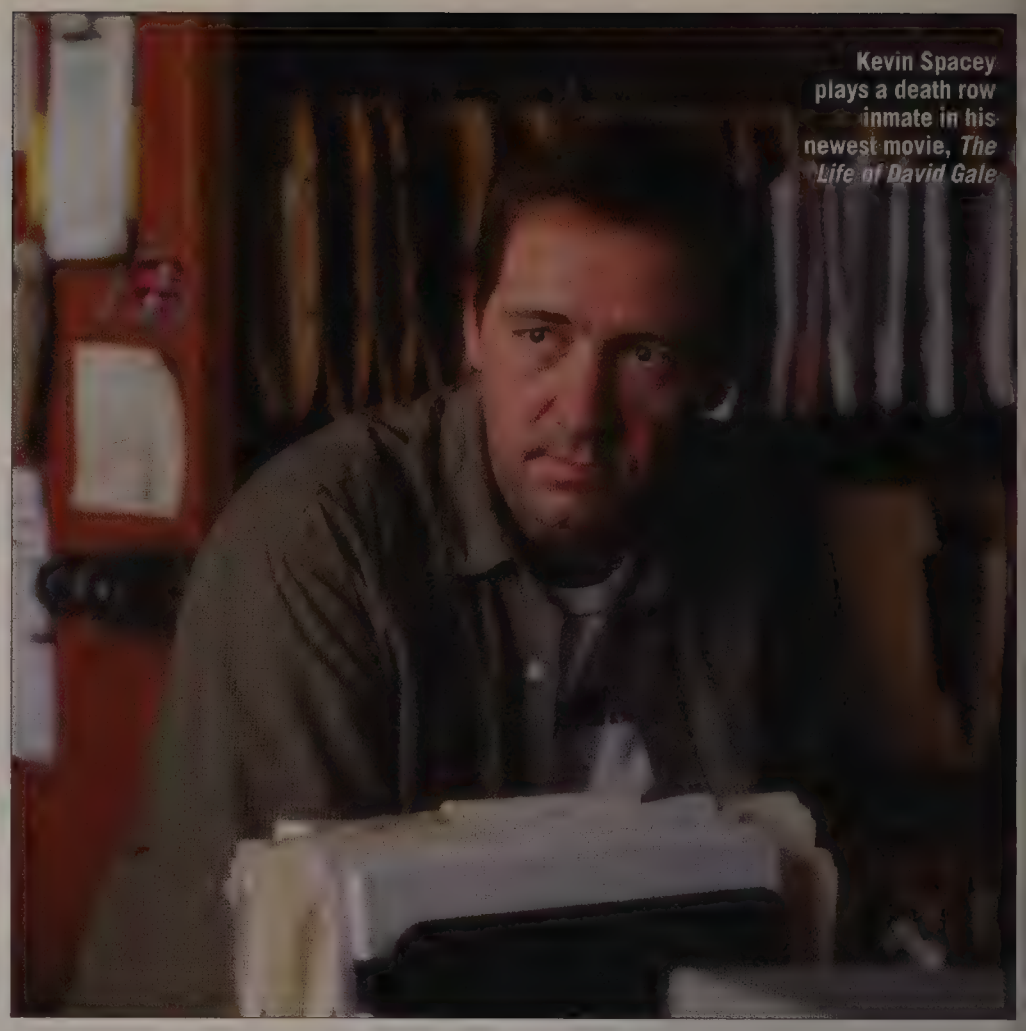
Kevin Spacey

BY JONATHAN SOROFF



Kevin Spacey plays a death row inmate in his newest movie, The Life of David Gale

Two-time Oscar winner Kevin Spacey was born Kevin Fowler, in 1959, in South Orange, N.J. Raised in southern California, he became involved in acting. After graduating from high school, he enrolled at Los Angeles Valley College for a short while before heading east to attend Juilliard. He left in the middle of his second year to join the New York Shakespeare Festival and made his professional stage debut in 1981 with a small part in Henry IV, Part One. He was subsequently fired by director Joseph Papp but made his Broadway debut later the same year in Ibsen's Ghosts. His theatrical career continued with productions of Shakespeare, Chekhov and O'Neill, and his first film appearance came in 1986, with Heartburn. Numerous television appearances (including a PBS biopic about Clarence Darrow) and roles in films like Working Girl, Glengarry Glen Ross and Seven followed, but his breakthrough came in 1995, with The Usual Suspects—the film that earned him his first Oscar (as Best Supporting Actor) and introduced the enigmatic fictional character of Keyser Sose to the world. Since then, Spacey has enjoyed a string of critical and box-office hits, including L.A. Confidential, Midnight in the Garden of Good and Evil and American Beauty, for which he won the Academy Award for Best Actor. He was in Boston recently to promote his new film, The Life of David Gale, a thriller that opens at the end of February.

Jonathan Soroff: You look a little tired in your new movie. Have you been getting enough sleep?

Kevin Spacey: [Laughs.]Well, in the movie I should look tired, shouldn't I? I'm an alcoholic death row guy. How good do you think I should look?

JS: If it was Brad Pitt or Tom Cruise playing that role, I guarantee they'd still look pretty.

KS: [Shrugs and smiles.]

JS: I've got to confess. I figured out the ending of the movie less than halfway through.

KS: I guess you're smarter than the average bear.

JS: If you were going to commit murder, how would you do it?

KS: With an enormous amount of wit. [Laughs.]

JS: It's time for the Kevin Spacey quiz: Name one adjective that describes how you feel when you smoke pot?

KS: [Laughs.] Who says I smoke pot?

JS: OK, work with me here, Kevin. Think of your last name.

KS: Oh, Spacey. That's a Welsh name, I'll have you know. It's spelled without the e in Wales, and it's my great-great-grandfather's name, but I love the story that I made it up from a combination of Spencer and Tracy.

JS: I never heard that. Back to the quiz. If Sammy Sosa has a son, what should he name him?

KS: Suzie?

JS: No. Keyser! C'mon Kevin, get on the ball!

KS: [Laughs.] Sorry.

JS: OK. Relate these three things to a role you played: mouthwash, macaque, legal process?

"I SAID TO EVERYBODY, 'I'M GOING AWAY NOW, BECAUSE IF I'M SICK OF ME, I CAN ONLY IMAGINE HOW THE REST OF THE WORLD FEELS.' "

KS: Jesus, I'm stumped. Mouthwash…Listerine? Colgate? Umm, Scope. Scopes Monkey Trial! Clarence Darrow!

JS: Ding! Ding! Ding! One out of three's not bad. So does being a movie star test your sense of humor?

KS: No. But being an actor does.

JS: What's worse: doing a press junket like this or having a root canal?

KS: Depends on what city you're in.

JS: Very tactful. So is Boston the smartest city in the United States?

KS: Without question. Although Concord comes close.

KS: It's not about size.

JS: Best free stuff you got recently. Any good movie star swag?

KS: Lemme think. I haven't been to an event in a while, so there hasn't been a lot of movie star swag. But those baskets are unbelievable. There's one problem, though. I've got friends who put tabs on stuff before I go to the event. They're like, "You always get everything. I want the blah-blah-blah." So I only get the leftovers.

JS: Isn't there something funny about the fact that the richer you get the more free stuff people give you?

KS: This is very true. Like anybody, I started out busting my ass and trying to get noticed. Finally, you start making money. You couldn't afford to buy anything before, and then when you can, all they wanna do is give it to you. It's a problem most people would love to have, but it's an irony that doesn't escape me.

JS: What star from the golden era do you most relate to?

KS: Hmmm. Interesting question. If you mean the one I like being compared to, that would be Spencer Tracy. If you look at the trajectory of his career, and how good he got from his first starring role in The Power and the Glory, in the late '30s, to 1969, with Guess Who's Coming to Dinner (he died 10 days after they completed shooting)—he was just an excellent actor.

JS: Finish this rhyme: Roses are red, Violets are blue, Kevin Spacey's an actor…

KS: But that you knew.

JS: Ever feel overexposed?

KS: I have—because there are choices you make and then there's a whole other world that happens without you even showing up, but it looks like you showed up. And whenever I've felt that way, I've disappeared for long periods of time. A year ago, when I'd finished filming this movie and I had rolled out two others within like a month of each other, I said to everybody, "I'm going away now, because if I'm sick of me, I can only imagine how the rest of the world feels."

JS: When you go to the movies, what do you order at the concession stand?

KS: Red licorice. Red Vines. They're like Twizzlers but better.

JS: We don't have those here. Must be some fancy Hollywood candy.

KS: Yup. And popcorn, if I'm not under strict supervision. And definitely either Milk Duds or chocolate-covered raisins.

JS: Cocktail of choice?

KS: A dirty martini.

KS: Vodka.

JS: A role you weren't offered that you'd give anything to have played?

KS: Three Days of the Condor. Awesome movie, one of the great thrillers ever, and Robert Redford was really good. But I would have f---ing killed him. [Laughs.] Sorry, Bob. Y'know I'm about to head to Sundance. Hope I don't see you on the street there, pardner.

JS: I'm Fed-Exing this interview to him. So you've accepted roles that were turned down by people with more conventional leading man looks, like George Clooney and Will Smith.

KS: [Smirking.] Yeah, guys who have dropped from the radar screen.

JS: Ever feel like you're getting sloppy seconds?

KS: No, and I'll tell you why. Here's a great story. 1941. George Raft. Not the greatest actor in the world, but a big star. Very upset that Warner Brothers has assigned this young upstart from Universal to make a movie with him. He walks off the set. Much to the delight of John Huston, who goes out and hires Humphrey Bogart and together they make The Maltese Falcon. That's just the way the movie business works. And besides, no actor owns a particular role.

JS: OK, Last question: Wanna come over to my house tonight and play board games?

KS: I'd love to, but I'm leaving for Sundance. What kind of board games?

JS: Cribbage, backgammon, Scrabble, Monopoly. Or we could play Celebrity. I'll bet you're good at that.

KS: [Laughing.] Yeah, I am. iB

an improper WEDDING GUIDE

Rings, dresses, flowers, receptions, even bachelor parties—our third annual guide to weddings has it all. Read on to discover how to infuse your big day with New England charm, find that perfect engagement ring here in Boston, throw a Las Vegas–style bachelor party without leaving the state—and feast your eyes and imagination on gorgeous wedding dresses and bouquets.

If you're in the never-say-marriage camp, however, forget all of the above and skip right to "The Art of Living Together." One unmarried Boston couple has a book and a project designed to take the guesswork out of the cohabitation decision and make "living in sin" heavenly.

Either way, here's to romance.

NEW ENGLAND nuptials

With a little Yankee ingenuity, you can give your wedding guests a taste of the region's finest

BY JULIE SHORT

Remember that last wedding reception you attended? The one held in the big ballroom at that chain hotel? You know the one we're talking about: It had pretty good food (a choice between salmon or steak), a decent band, yellow cake with sugary white frosting...and, oh yeah, a decorative take-home gift (a vase? a champagne glass?) with the happy couple's names printed on it. Sound familiar? Or does it sound too familiar—like half a dozen weddings you've endured in the past couple of years?

Now think about the ones you do remember. What made them stand out from the rest? We're willing to bet that most have three things in common: a spirit of fun, attention to detail and a distinctive sense of place.

For those of you planning a wedding in New England, why not give your guests—some of whom have flown in from different parts of the country—a sampling of the region's finest? With a theme in mind, and some creative forethought, it's easy to infuse a touch of New England into different aspects of the wedding—from the cake, flowers and decorations to the transportation, favors and cuisine. Whether you've settled on a traditional seaside clambake, a winter getaway in the mountains, a picturesque view of farmland or a bit of Boston's history, it's easy to add memorable touches to your wedding celebration. Here we offer suggestions culled from numerous interviews with professionals involved in every aspect of planning a wedding, plus tips from brides and grooms themselves.

YOU ARE CORDIALLY INVITED...

Your wedding invitation offers your guests the first hint of the festivities to come, says Donna Cina, manager of A Basket Case in West Boylston, Mass. "The couple should really think about the impression they want to reflect—whether it be formal, with a gold seashell embossed at the top, or more informal with colors, flowers or a different type of print," Cina says. "The invitation reflects the bride and groom's taste and lifestyle."

For seaside weddings, Arlene Cronk, owner of Invitations & Co. in Boston, recommends a seashell, lighthouse or even a Nantucket basket embossed on the invitation. Cronk does have one caveat: Avoid images of lobsters, except on rehearsal dinner invites or other informal enclosures. "You just can't make a lobster look very elegant," she says. To elaborate on historical themes and settings, such as Beacon Hill or the Freedom Trail, Bryan Rafanelli, owner of Rafanelli Events in Boston, suggests printing an old-fashioned gas lamppost at the top of the invitation.

For outdoor weddings, the paper can be thicker and less delicate than traditional invitations, with a more contemporary font and splashed with vibrant colors, says Lisa Lundgren, co-owner of Demetri Productions in Everett, Mass. If it's fall, the envelope can be lined with an autumnal color like cranberry or rust, and the invitation can be decorated with fall foliage.

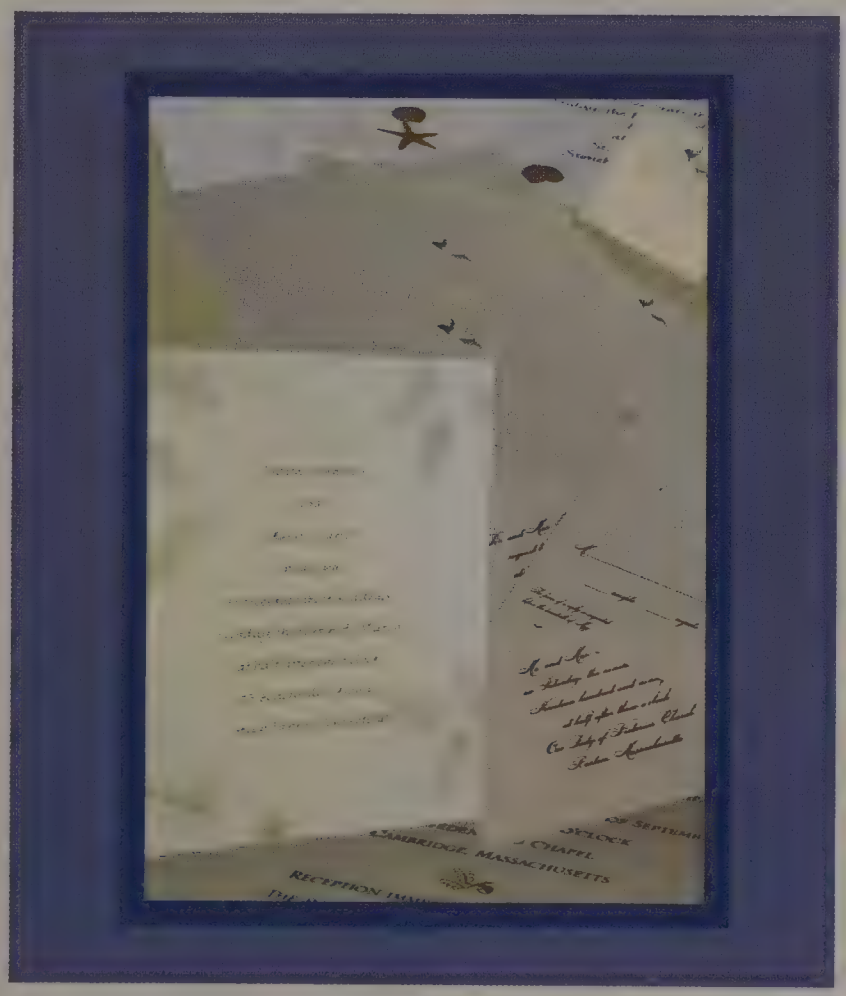
Of course, if these ideas sound too staid, there's always the other extreme: Event planner Ellen Weintraub of A-List Productions in Brookline has used invitations in the form of a message in a bottle, as well as printed on beach balls or on flip-flops.

LET THEM EAT CAKE

When it comes to wedding cakes, there's beautiful...and then there's fun. But there's no reason why your cake can't be both. Paula Kirrane, co-owner of The Icing on the Cake in Newton, recently designed a cake for a couple from the West Coast who wanted to show off their newly adopted city to their guests, many of whom had never been to Boston before. Kirrane's Freedom Trail cake had a brick path on each tier that wound around to the top of the cake. Along the path, she carved historical sites, like the Swan Boats, the Old State House and Faneuil Hall, out of fondant. At the top of the cake, a sculpture featured the bride and groom emerging from a bean pot.

That may sound a bit extreme (Kirrane admits it was one of the most untraditional cakes she's ever designed), but it gets you thinking outside the cake box. On the more conventional side, ropes made of icing wrapped around the cake and twisted into a love knot are popular for seaside weddings. "It's symbolic of tying the knot but with a nautical effect," says Kirrane. Or how about scattering handmade icing seashells around the base and adding a cake topper featuring a sugar sculpture of an open clamshell and a string of pearls? Kirrane's done it.

In keeping with the beach theme, Lisa Raffael, owner of Delicious Desserts in Falmouth, Mass., designed a cake with candy pebbles and fondant sea grass on the base level, shells made of white chocolate on the next level and a fondant lighthouse on top. The entire cake rested on a mirror to give the illusion of water.



You can also opt for seasonal flourishes. For autumn weddings, leaves made out of icing and sugar can be colored deep plum, rust, red and gold; to portray a winter scene, you can order a "snowflake cake" with handmade icing snowflakes. "Few places other than New England can provide such a perfect setting for a winter wonderland wedding," says Tasha Bracken, owner of Simple Details event planning in Newton.

GOIN' TO THE CHAPEL

Of course, arriving at the wedding in a white stretch limo is the tried-and-true option, but may we suggest a few alternatives to ensure that you and your wedding party travel in style? Boston Duck Tours at the Prudential Center in Boston, for example, will rent out a driver and a 32-passenger amphibious vehicle for 80 minutes within Boston city limits (quacking at pedestrians is optional).

Other means of transportation include the Boston-based Old Town Trolley Tours and the Beantown Trolley, both of which go anywhere in the state, carry 40 passengers, offer narration if desired and can be decorated to match the colors of the wedding. Both the ducks and the trolleys can be used to transport the wedding party to and from the ceremony and reception, as well as for prewedding festivities like the rehearsal dinner or private tours of the city for out-of-town guests—that way you don't have to worry about visiting guests getting lost.

Even more unique is Loon Meadow Farm, a horse-and-carriage business in Norfolk, Conn., that services most of Massachusetts (with the exception of downtown Boston and Cape Cod). Owners Beth and Steve Podhajecki will lease a horse and carriage to deliver a bride to the altar, plus horse-drawn "wagonettes" to transport the bride's attendants. Or there's always the method used by Zach Bressler, an outdoorsy groom who paddled up in a wooden canoe to meet his bride-to-be at the altar along the shoreline.

A BLOSSOMING ROMANCE

With the abundance of plants and shrubbery native to New England, it's relatively easy to choose flora that lends a sense of place to your wedding. In the winter, you can opt for decorative arrangements and centerpieces made with native greens like white pine, hemlock, cedar, dogwood or cranberries, says Janice E. Cox, owner and floral designer at The Secret Garden in West Boylston. In the fall, use crab apples, rose hips, colorful foliage, gourds or bittersweet—"anything harvest," says Paul Shusas, owner of Holmes-Shusas Florist in Worcester, Mass. Spring decorations could include skunk cabbages, pussy willows, irises, daffodils or tulips. In the summer, there's always the vivid blue hydrangea, which grows in profusion on Cape Cod and the islands, or sunflowers, peonies and zinnias.

For bouquets, Jeri Solomon, owner of Jeri Solomon Floral Designs in Melrose, Mass., uses any combination of tulips, lilacs, lilies of the valley, sweet pea or virburnum flowers in the spring. For a summertime wedding, Shusas likes to add New England wildflowers like Queen Anne's lace, black-eyed Susans, field asters, baby's breath, herbs or any type of meadow flower to a bouquet. You can even consider incorporating a few seashells into your bouquet for a seaside wedding.

Centerpieces for summer weddings can get creative: One guest remembers a wedding where the centerpieces were colorful plastic sand pails filled with flowers, seashells and sand. Other ideas for seaside centerpieces include lighthouses surrounded by sand, seashells, stones and mini lobster soaps; porcelain Nantucket baskets filled with hydrangea; or tiny frosted glass vases (reminiscent of sea glass) with single buds nestled into a pile of sand in the middle of the table, says Solomon. Many of the florists we spoke with recommended centerpieces made of fall flowers tucked into a hollowed-out pumpkin or a wooden fruit bowl filled with artificial leaves and apples.

A FEW OF OUR FAVORITE THINGS

Local brides and grooms have gotten really creative with favors. Some of our favorites: miniature bottles of maple syrup; Red Sox baseball caps inscribed with the couple's name and wedding date; small jugs of apple cider with customized labels; Yankee candles; and seashells made of chocolate. Nancy Vargas, owner of Le Jardin Blanc floral design in Southborough, Mass., offers this idea: "I recently suggested that a couple pack small white cake boxes with Dunkin' Donuts Munchkins for every guest." It's a perfect Bostonian touch, she adds, "since Dunkin' Donuts is like a cult here."

Welcome baskets for out-of-town guests can include such local specialties as Boston baked beans, Cape Cod potato chips, Harbor Sweets, chocolate-covered cranberries, Necco wafers or Nantucket Nectars—even a recipe for Parker House rolls, says Beverly Ann Bonner, president of The Wedding Beautiful in Norwood, Mass. At Phillips Candy House on Morrissey Boulevard in Boston, store manager Terri Ferolito will make gift bags or boxes with a local theme. The New England Chest, for example, is filled with Boston teas, maple syrup, chocolate lobsters and seashells, and a New England guidebook.

FROM MOUNTAINS TO MOLEHILLS

Even the smallest details count when it comes to embracing a New England theme in your wedding. Event planner Kelly Scriven, owner of The Bride's Maid in Whitman, Mass., painted table numbers on large conch shells and placed them at the center of each guest table, surrounded by sea glass. To carry the beach theme further, she used an old lobster trap as a holder for wedding cards and a rope hammock for gifts. One guest attended a wedding on Martha's Vineyard where the bride strung her place cards on a clothesline alongside a beach house.

For a fall wedding, planner Tasha Bracken used brushed silver place card holders in the shape of apples. Bryan Rafanelli recommends creating a cobblestone tabletop to hold place cards if your wedding has a historic Boston theme. To make such a table, he found smooth stones on a local beach and glued them evenly onto a tabletop. Another trend is to name tables instead of numbering them. Newlyweds Frank and Rachel Parent, for example, used photographs of themselves on mountaintops all over New England and named the tables after each peak. It added a special personal touch to the reception, plus it offered extended family members and guests insight into the bride and groom as a couple, revealing their common interests.

BAKED BEANS AND BROWN BREAD

"First and foremost, people think of New England for seafood," says Glenn Gardinier, director of sales at Calla Lily Caterers in Needham, "and it's important that what you serve is indigenous." Consider offering Cape scallops, Bay shrimp, Maine lobster, coldwater whitefish like haddock or cod, or littleneck clams and oysters shucked to order. How the food is served, however, is up to you. For her wedding at the Popponesset Inn in New Seabury, Mass., Boston resident Kaitlyn Enright arranged to have a raw bar served in a dinghy surrounded by sand and seashells. New England clambakes are appropriate for both rehearsal dinners and wedding receptions. And you don't have to have a seaside wedding to take advantage of that option says Scriven of The Bride's Maid. Both Woodman's Catering in Essex, Mass., and McGrath Clambakes in Newport, R.I., will bring the shore to you.

"Incorporate traditional New England fare into your menu," says James Messinger, owner of The Crazy Chefs Caterers in Easton, Mass. That means brown bread, baked beans, blueberry pie, clam chowder (consider offering a chowder station during cocktail hour) or steamers, for example. The Top of the Hub is hosting a wedding for a local bride who's decided to offer "streets of Boston" food stations, with cuisine-based tables devoted to the Waterfront, the North End and Chinatown, among others. And don't forget the drinks: Cape Codders, apple cider, fruit wine from Nashoba Valley Winery in Bolton, Mass., sparkling wine from Westport Rivers Winery in Westport, Mass., or a local Boston brew like Sam Adams or Harpoon.

TOUR D' BOSTON

The most obvious way to let your guests experience New England is to schedule local activities throughout the weekend. Jenn and Jason Campoli, for example, invited their guests to join them for a Red Sox game at Fenway on the Friday night before their wedding (their rehearsal dinner was held on Thursday). They put their best man in charge, listing his name on their save-the-date card. He collected the money and arranged for 45 guests to attend the game. "Our friends from out of town loved it," says Jason. "After the game, a bunch of them headed to the nearest Irish bar."

"I always recommend leaving an itinerary at the hotel for the guests," says Kristen Weiss, owner of I Thee Wed in South Natick. Activities like a Boston Duck Tour, a sunset cruise on the Boston Harbor or the Charles River, a Beacon Hill garden tour or a fall foliage tour can be scheduled for all guests to attend—or you can simply list the local sights and let guests tour on their own. "Many of our clients create their own wedding Web sites with links to places of interest, like Kennebunk, the North End, Walden Pond, the Freedom Trail or the mansions in Newport that out-of-towners can visit," says Rafanelli. "Whether your guests go there or not, it makes them think of New England."

Then there's always Kate Shamon's suggestion: "On the Thursday before our wedding, we went to Route 1 Miniature Golf Course in Saugus and then had Chinese food and beverages at the Kowloon afterwards." You can't get any more New England than that. iB

NEVER leave for LAS VEGAS

BY EZRA DYER

Replicate a Vegas bachelor party in New England and spend your airfare money one dollar bill at a time

If you're going to throw a no-holds-barred, liquor-soaked, stripper-oogling, stay-up-all-night-gambling bachelor party, Las Vegas is your place. "Vegas is the quintessential spot for bachelor parties," says Chris Schultz, president of BachelorBlowOut.com, a company that markets party packages for bachelor (and bachelorette) bashes. "Vegas is a 24-hour party place."

But if you're at that age when one of your friends seems to be getting hitched every other weekend, multiple flights to Sin City can leave you broke before you pull up a seat at your first blackjack table. If you're the next guy in line to say "I do," you might consider saving your pals a load of cash by replicating the key elements of a Vegas vacation right here in New England.

Don't laugh. According to Schultz, the typical Vegas itinerary goes something like this: "Saturday is the bachelor party day. That might start with a round of golf. Then a lot of guys do a steak dinner. Then you get in the limo and go to bars. At the end of the night, usually about half the group takes the limo back, and half the group's still in the strip club or casino at 6 or 7 in the morning."

OK, so maybe it's not as easy to keep the party going 'til the break of dawn in New England, where the bars close at 2 am. That's why you'll need to compensate by kicking things off bright and early. First you'll want a ride. A 10-passenger stretch limo costs about $75 an hour, which is a bargain considering that you didn't have to pay for airfare, right? Now, you could go play golf or race go-carts or engage in some other semi-wholesome activity, but the doors open at noon at Centerfolds and there's no cover charge at that hour. So ask yourself: Is it ever too early to catch a little exotic dancing?

Post-Centerfolds, get in the limo and go for lunch—or dinner, as the case may be. To capture that Vegas flavor, consider hiring an Elvis impersonator to provide entertainment during the meal. (Make sure you've lined up a private function room at the restaurant, regardless.) Several local Elvis impersonators, such as "Slick" Scott Douglas, are available at www.ladyluckmusic.com.

After laying the gastronomic groundwork for a big night, tell your driver to head south to either Foxwoods or Mohegan Sun—either mega-casino is the closest thing New England has to the Strip. Upon your arrival, you can bid your driver farewell and go catch a Vegas-esque performance from the likes of Engelbert Humperdinck or Pat Boone (two upcoming acts at Foxwoods and Mohegan Sun, respectively), or just get right to the business of wagering a few chips and trying to convince the cocktail waitress that you're so money.

If you know when to hold 'em and when to fold 'em, everyone can return to Boston the next day in another limo. If it turns out you don't, there's always the bus service. To properly nurse a Vegas-style hangover, you'll need to spend the rest of the next day dozing by a pool. If it's summer, the Colonnade's rooftop pool ($22 per visit) is the obvious choice, but if it's not, the Cambridge Sonesta's pool is housed inside an atrium with a retractable glass roof and walls ($15 per visit).

So what's Las Vegas got that New England hasn't got? "In January the Palms hotel added two new suites specifically for bachelor parties," says Schultz. "One of them has its own stripper pole." Maybe airfare to Vegas isn't such a bad investment after all. iB with this ring...

Buying a diamond shouldn't make you feel like a bull in a china shop

You've found the love of your life, the woman who comforts you, makes you laugh and makes your heart sing. The decision—enormous as it may be—comes naturally: You want to marry her. Now comes the hard part: picking out a ring.

For single men who've decided to ask the most important question of their lives, the prospect of walking into a jewelry store and spending thousands of dollars on a small, shiny stone is a daunting one. You want to get something she'll adore, but you don't want to go completely broke doing it.

Aside from a car or a home, an engagement ring is one of the most expensive purchases a man can make. "The one piece of advice that really struck a chord with me was that this is the one purchase you don't want to cut corners on," says Tom Jackson, 33, an investment analyst who got married last year. "If you chintz on it, you'll only hear about it for the rest of your life."

That's music to the ears of jewelers who offer similar advice. "This can be an arduous and stressful time," says Michael Lebowitz, fine jewelry merchandise manager for Shreve, Crump & Low on Boylston Street. "When he gets down on bended knee, he wants to see a smile from ear to ear, and the only word he wants to hear is 'yes.' There are certain things in life you shouldn't sacrifice, and engagement rings are one of them."

Figuring out how much to spend can make the process even more stressful. While the oft-quoted "two months' salary" guideline was an invention of diamond giant De-Beers Co., it remains a common, though not absolute, standard. Lebowitz recommends that you tell the jeweler up front how much you are looking to spend. "A reputable store will work within your budget," he says. "This should be as comfortable and exciting a purchase as you're going to make in your life." And while the diamond is still considered the universal standard for an engagement ring, some people are moving to less costly alternatives. According to Lebowitz, sapphires, rubies and emeralds are the most popular, in that order.

For the amount of money you're spending and the emotional turmoil involved, at least one can take comfort in the fact that these diamonds dug out of the ground halfway around the world are a limited commodity, right? Well, not quite. Apparently, diamonds aren't all that rare. "There are enough diamonds in the world to fill a cupful for every man, woman and child on the planet," according to Diamondreview.com, an online tutorial for shoppers. They're expensive because diamond companies limit the quantity of diamonds produced for sale worldwide.

Still, when confronted with purchasing this expensive—if not naturally rare—item, would-be grooms need to educate themselves on the basics. There are several variables to consider when selecting an engagement ring: the shape of the stone; the style and metal of the setting; the quality and size of the diamond; whether to bring your fiancée along for the selection process; and, of course, the price.

Let's start with the basics. Typically, the four C's describe diamonds: carat weight, clarity, color and cut. Carat weight simply tells you the weight of the diamond: One carat equals 200 milligrams. Clarity is the number and extent of flaws in a diamond. Color refers to the diamond's tint and is ranked on a scale from D (clear) to Z (yellow), with the clearest diamonds the most highly valued. By most accounts, the cut is the most complicated and most important factor in pricing a diamond. It gives the diamond its brilliance, affecting the way it reflects and refracts light.

By far the most important tool when ring shopping is background knowledge. In addition to asking friends for help and visiting different jewelers, you can consult Web sites that provide helpful information. At www.diamondscope.com, you can find price comparisons of online jewelers, while www.diamondreview.com offers consumer information without ties to any sellers. Unfortunately, the terms used to measure a diamond require a veritable Ph.D. to understand. The Gemological Institute of America (www.gia.org) rates a diamond's clarity using a scale ranging from FL (flawless) and IF (internally flawless) to VSI (very slightly included) to I (included). (Inclusions are the flaws that occur naturally in gemstones.) There are terms to describe the way a stone has been cut, for example, step cuts, brilliant cuts, rose cuts, old European cuts. A popular trend these days is jewelers' own unique cuts.

The best way to learn about all this is to shop around. Jewelers, recent ring purchasers and online sites suggest spending some time looking at rings and getting a sense of what's out there before going through with the actual purchase. Of course, much of the anxiety over choosing the right ring can be reduced if you take your partner shopping.

"The only research I did was bringing my future wife with me," says Rice Bryan, 30, an education administrator who got married last summer. "With something she's going to wear for the rest of her life, I wanted to get her something she was going to like. If I picked it out myself, I know she wouldn't have liked it."

About half of ring buyers are in Bryan's camp, according to Sumner Dorfman, owner of Dorfman Jewelers on Newbury Street. "There are two types of buyers," he says. "Fifty percent are the knight on a white horse who say 'It's my gift; I'll pick it and surprise her.' Fifty percent come with the lady, the macho guys who say 'What do I know about these things?'"

The shopping-together approach takes much of the surprise out of the event. She knows she's getting a ring; she just doesn't know when. But you can still get creative with the actual proposal.

"I made the presentation a surprise on my birthday," says graphic designer Scott Oldham, 33. "I figured that would be the day she'd be least likely to expect it."

eased and the experience became far less nerve wracking. He eventually found the right ring, a round-cut center stone with two smaller diamonds on each side.

"It was hard because it was such a big thing in my life, and I wasn't able to talk to her about it," O'Brien says. "It was fun, and I can laugh about it now, but it was really hard not to spill the beans."

It all paid off in the end on a cold December night by the large Christmas tree on the Common. "I wanted it to be a surprise," O'Brien says. "She had no idea [that I would propose] and for me that made it more special, and I think it was special for her."

Once you've selected the kind of ring you want to buy, the next step is to find the right jeweler. Even though the jewelry business is very competitive, and jewelers depend heavily on word of mouth, that doesn't mean you can't get the short end of a deal.

"The biggest thing is to know you can trust your jeweler," says O'Brien, who was fortunate to have a family friend who is a jeweler. "You really don't know what you're getting."

The best way to ensure you're getting the diamond you're paying for, say jewelers, is with a certificate from the Gemological Institute of America. "The GIA is the best piece of consumer protection you can get," says Jim Hazard, a salesman with Amoroso Jewelers on Washington Street. "That's all consumers need." The GIA certificate includes information such as a gem's shape, clarity, dimensions and whether it has been treated in any way.

"It's probably the blindest item you're going to buy, something very few people feel comfortable purchasing." Lebowitz says. "The odds of getting fooled or shafted in the diamond business are great. If a deal sounds too good to be true, it probably is."

In a large city there are always plenty of choices, but Boston provides seven floors full of jewelers in one building at the Jewelry Exchange downtown, not to mention numerous others within walking distance. Jewelers are scattered throughout the city as well as the suburbs.

There are other options besides buying new.

Scott Oldham and his wife, Alison Cook, had always been antique lovers, and when the time came to purchase a ring, they looked to some of the places where they shopped on the North Shore.

Alison didn't want to buy a new diamond. "For political reasons, she didn't want to support the diamond industry," Oldham says. But she had an idea of the ring she wanted and found it at an antique store. That meant savings of a couple of thousand dollars compared with buying a new ring, Oldham says. When shopping for an antique ring, Oldham says, "you either have to be really lucky or really open. I got really lucky."

Dan Dial, 27, a Boston accountant, and his fiancée, Jenny Douglass, considered the antique route as well but couldn't find what they were looking for. Instead she selected a nontraditional white-gold band with sapphires and diamonds embedded in the ring.

Once you have the right woman, how hard can it be to find the right ring?

"I did just what you're not supposed to," says education consultant John Faubert, 31. "We went out to Shreve, Crump & Low, and she fell in love with one thing. We kind of ended on ring No. 1." iB

POP GOES THE QUESTION

If you're at all nervous about getting down on bended knee, keep in mind that many have gone before you. In fact, these Boston spots are virtual flyways for flocks of marriage-hopeful swains.

TOP OF THE HUB: A romantic restaurant, sweeping views of the city and fine dining combine to make the Prudential Center restaurant a top choice for lovebirds.

"One year I wanted to host a party for all the people who have gotten engaged there, but the manager told me we'd fill the entire Prudential Center," says Rosanne Mercer, a spokeswoman for Top of the Hub. "There are literally tens of thousands."

During fireworks displays, it can seem as if half the men in the restaurant are on their knees, she says. The staff is happy to accommodate, placing rings in ice sculptures and helping to select the right table so she has the perfect view of airplanes pulling messages.

"You name it, we've done it," Mercer says.

Make plans early, though. Table 18, coveted for its corner view, is reserved up to a year in advance.

BOSTON PUBLIC GARDEN/COMMON: What could be more quintessentially Boston than the Swan Boats, a favorite proposal spot for visitors and locals alike, according to Mary Hines, director of external affairs for the Parks and Recreation Department. Equally popular is the Frog Pond in winter, where the staff will play your music and make sure you're the last two left on the ice before the Zamboni comes out.

"Eighty percent get down on bended knee and do the whole bit on center ice," says Duncan Finch, the pond's general manager.

DALÍ, SOMERVILLE: After 14 years in business, the staff at Dalí have the proposal routine down pat. Not only do engagements merit attention from the restaurant at large, but waiters are also happy to bring the ring with dessert and include a glass of Cava, Spanish sparkling wine. Once the deal has been sealed, the waitstaff will bring out a wedding veil while blowing bubbles and singing "She's getting married in the morning," from My Fair Lady.

"Sung by a bunch of Spanish waiters it's pretty funny," says Mary Anne Carlson, party planner for the restaurant.

FENWAY PARK: For the greatest public exposure of your special moment, there's probably no more popular place than the center-field scoreboard during a Red Sox game. About 30,000 people are witnesses to the event, and who knows how many more are watching on television. Just make sure you'll get the answer you're looking for. A minimum $100 contribution to the Red Sox Foundation will get your message posted. (Celtics and Bruins fans are out of luck, by the way. The FleetCenter doesn't accept proposals via the scoreboard.)

the art of living together

lie in skipping the wedding? does the secret to an endless honeymoon

BY ERIN HAGEDORN

You're his soulmate. He's "the one." You've finally found Mr. Right. Probably. Well, you're pretty sure. Right? Of course. Which is why you've decided to move in together. And why not? Your toothbrush has taken up permanent residence in his bathroom, half of your wardrobe is in his closet, you're at his place most of the time anyway and, let's face it, his furniture is so much nicer than yours. Are you a prospective or current unmarried cohabitor? Then read on.

Even though almost half of U.S. adults under the age of 45 live with a partner at some point without being married, chances are you're bombarded with advice that boils down to the particularly unhelpful "Don't do it." But you want to be together, and you're not ready to get married—or maybe you just don't believe in measuring commitment with wedding rings. So you pack up your things and take the plunge. But the confusion doesn't end there. Once you've moved in, you may be faced with questions ranging from "Should we marry?" to "Can we make it work for the long haul without marrying?" to the more practical and sobering "Can we get domestic partner benefits?"

While there are scores of magazines, classes and books devoted to helping newlyweds and engaged couples navigate their relationship, there is a surprising lack of resources for unmarried couples. Determined to fill that void, Dorian Solot and her boyfriend/partner/POSSLQ (person of the opposite sex sharing living quarters, as the U.S. Census called it) of a decade, Marshall Miller, have devoted their lives and their relationship to helping unmarried partners.

A HANDBOOK FOR LIVING... TOGETHER

"There are tons of experts who give advice on how to date and how to have a good marriage, but a surprising lack of information about how to know whether you're ready to live together, how to cohabitate successfully, how to decide whether marriage is right for you," says Solot. "Is society in denial?" The couple's new book, Unmarried to Each Other: The Essential Guide to Living Together as an Unwed Couple (Marlowe & Co.), offers advice for cohabiting couples.

An introductory chapter for those considering living together includes a quiz that helps couples examine their reasons for moving in and determine whether their beliefs and desires match up. Do you want to live with her to spend more time together? To make sure you're compatible? Because you'll probably get engaged soon? Or perhaps it's a convenient escape route from a scary ex. It's best to find out those answers before calling U-Haul.

The book also offers advice for cohabitants in the midst of the "to wed or not to wed" decision; tips for staying together; ways to handle questions and objections from relatives; guidelines for parenting without a marriage license and for seeking domestic partner health benefits and other legal and financial protections.

Solot and Miller, who met when they were students at Brown University, have plenty of experience with that last topic—they're also the founders of the Alternatives to Marriage Project (AtMP), a Boston-based nonprofit group they started in 1998 as both a legal and emotional resource and a lobbying voice for unmarried couples. They lobby against discrimination based on marital status and work to build acceptance of cohabitation—both for heterosexual and same-sex couples—as a legally protected, socially accepted form of commitment.

"Unmarried couples constantly have to battle other people's assumptions and expectations about their relationship," Solot explains. "The 'When are you getting married?' hints can get exhausting. There's also this sense that no matter how good a relationship is or how long it lasts, it's not really taken seriously. Cohabitation is often seen as not quite good enough."

There are other challenges as well. "Landlords sometimes refuse to rent to unmarried couples," says Solot. "Couples often have to pay twice as much as a married couple when they rent a car or sign up for tenants' insurance. And there are some much larger discrimination issues, too, when it comes to adoption, immigration, Social Security and other situations where families come into contact with the law."

In Boston alone, one in five cohabiting couples is unmarried

STRENGTH IN NUMBERS

The number of unmarried, cohabiting couples is larger than you might think. In Boston alone, one in five cohabiting couples is unmarried (in the United States overall, that ratio drops to one in 11 couples), according to the 2000 Census. There are 11 million cohabiting people in the United States today, an increase of 72 percent in the past decade alone. Unmarried cohabitation is a rapidly growing trend seldom acknowledged by traditionalists and governmental policies, says Solot.

In Unmarried to Each Other, Solot and Miller acknowledge the statistic that half of all marriages end in divorce, but their goal is not to knock the institution of marriage. "We aren't against marriage, but rather we support unmarried relationships," Solot explains. "We just point out that in order to understand the whole landscape of relationships and families today, you need to look beyond married couples." In the book, they argue that cohabitation without marriage is a valid option deserving of the privileges that married couples have—domestic partner benefits, legal and financial protection, to name a few.

Culturally, we've come leaps and bounds from times when hotel registration clerks requested evidence of marriage before handing over the room key (although eight states still have laws, albeit rarely enforced, making unmarried cohabitation illegal). But the United States is still far away from the progressive laws that exist in countries like Sweden, Canada and France, where unmarried partners can register and gain "marital rights."

In their book, Solot and Miller don't hold back on the subject of how the United States needs to change its legal codes so that all families are treated fairly. They also attempt to debunk what they feel are misperceptions about unmarried couples, for example, the statistic (often cited by right-wing groups) that there's a 50 percent higher divorce rate among couples who live together before marriage than among couples who don't. Solot and Miller say the statistic fails to take into account that people who marry without living together beforehand tend to be more religious, conservative and strongly opposed to divorce. What the data prove, they say, is that people who are historically opposed to divorce have a lower divorce rate.

SHOULD WE OR SHOULDN'T WE?

The divorce rate shows what too many couples have learned: A wedding ring isn't necessarily a passport to happiness. But even so, singles' views on unmarried "shacking up" vary widely. Some see cohabitation as a state of limbo for those seeking to avoid the personal and social commitment that marriage represents. "I'd never live with a guy," says Candice, a 27-year-old Boston professional. "I think when people live together it's a cop-out. You're just trying it out, so there's no real commitment. If you have it in your mind if they leave the toilet seat up it could end your relationship, you don't work through problems. When you get married, it's for better or worse."

Julia, a 30-year-old professional writer, sees living together as an obstacle to getting engaged. "I don't want to move in with my boyfriend because it will drag the process out longer," she says. "I want to get married, and what's the incentive if we're already living like we're married?"

Others see cohabitation as a necessary stepping stone on the path to marriage. Wilson, a 25-year-old financial consultant, recently made the jump to a live-in relationship. "I know we disagree about how long a 'trial' period should last, but we both agree that 'living in sin' for a while is an invaluable test of whether our relationship can last the trials and tribulations of marriage," he says. "Living together has been great, and I've actually fallen more in love, so it won't be long now, but I'm not sure I could have felt this way without knowing what it would be like living together beforehand."

But what if you've gotten used to living together, like it, and worry that marriage might snuff out your relationship's lively spark? What if you can't legally marry because you're gay? For some, it's as simple as Noel Coward's statement, "I've sometimes thought of marrying, and then I've thought again." The question for many live-in couples, then, often goes from "Why haven't we gotten married yet?" to "Honey, what's the rush to get married?" and sometimes even "Why get married at all?"

For example CB, an engineer, doesn't view living with her boyfriend as a stepping stone to marriage but rather the final commitment in itself. They've been together for 10 years, own a house in Arlington and share a car. Neither wants to get married (or start a family). "Most people just don't view that living together can be the end goal," she says. "I still view the institution of marriage as repressive, not to mention intrusive. But I also recognize that it's important to most people, and they view it differently. What are personal choices for some of us become moral crusades for others. But that's the same for most any lifestyle decision."

PRESSING POLITICAL BUTTONS

With such a large population of unmarried couples these days, especially in metropolitan areas like Boston, it's surprising the issue can be so controversial—and not just among the Jerry Falwell constituency. (Solot recently debated Falwell on TV.) Hosts of a radio show in the South had booked Solot and Miller as guests but canceled when they looked more closely at the book They didn't think their audience could handle it.

Controversy also came from the Heritage Foundation, a conservative think tank that released an article denouncing an AtMP report, Let Them Eat Wedding Rings, which derided the government's use of welfare dollars to promote marriage. Ron Haskins, a senior fellow at another research organization, the Brookings Institution, and adviser for welfare policy in the Bush administration, recently told the Washington Times, "Cohabiting is a plague, and we should do what we can do discourage it."

"The longer I do this work, the more convinced I am that there's a need for this project," Solot says.

These days, in between speaking and reading junkets, Solot and Miller spend most of their time writing op-ed pieces and making media appearances on NPR and other outlets. They recently added the 5,000th household to AtMP's mailing list. "Of course, given that there are 5.5 million unmarried couple households in the country, we have a ways to go," Solot says.

As far as their own unwed relationship goes, Solot and Miller have been together for 10 years. What's their reason for not sealing the deal with a wedding ceremony? First and foremost, they say they're happy this way. They're committed; they live together; and they're in love. And, well, getting married would ruin their gig. Solot says, "It's a strange thing to be sort of professionally unmarried. It's not what I expected to be when I grew up!" iB

When it comes to the all-important wedding dress, brides are no longer limited to what's on the racks. It's become commonplace for a woman to design her own masterpiece, selecting a neckline from this one and a hemline from the other. Whether created just for you or bought at the local boutique, the right choice is always what's most flattering on you and doesn't make your least favorite body part look big. But to get the ideas flowing, here are three trends that will be holding strong for the next few years.

THE ERA DRESS: The era dress is anything that looks like you plucked it from a classic decade. A 1930s-style gown, for example, features a shorter skirt with a bit of a flare, often accompanied by a train made of sheer layers. The 40s look features a plunging neckline and a high-slit skirt that's fitted all the way to the floor, while 50s-style dresses, usually calf-length, are designed with a small waist, full hips and a perfectly fitted top.

LADYLIKE LACE: Lace-covered dresses are very formal but can be perfect for an outdoor wedding because the fabric looks amazing against a natural backdrop. The texture gives an added dimension to bridal photos and is flattering against any bride's skin when paired with an tiqued coloring.

SPLASH OF COLOR: Bride after bride walks down the aisle looking like a vision in white, but imagine that entrance with splashes of red or pink in your gown. Color is on the hot list for wedding dresses right now, showing up in everything from embroidered flowers to velvet trim and beads. Using color in your gown to accent the rest of the bridal party can help ensure a striking photo.

On the next few pages, you'll see samples of all of the above. So toss out your old ideas about weddings and start dreaming up your signature look.

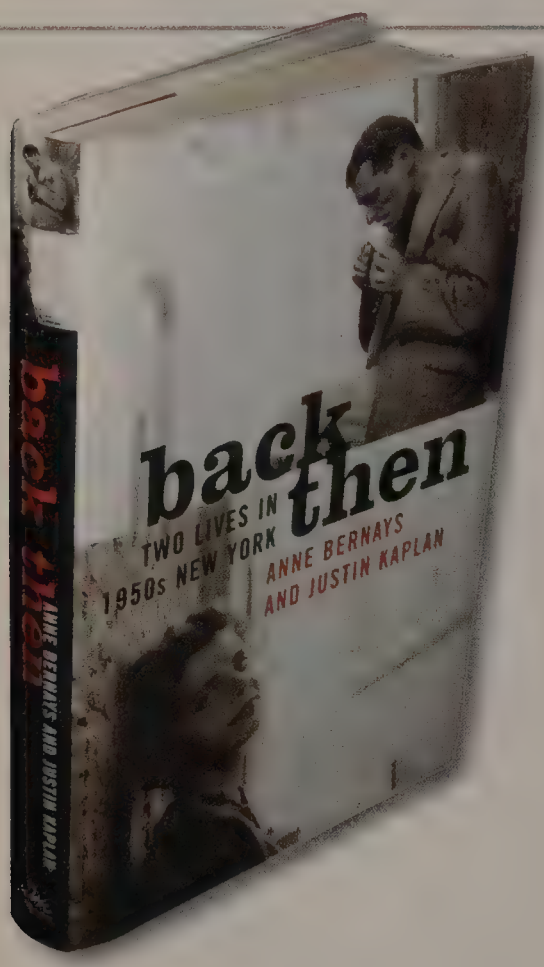
BY MOPSY STRANGE KENNEDY



LOVE IN LITERARY LAND

Back Then, a memoir by novelist Anne Bernays and her husband, Twain biographer Justin Kaplan, chronicles the New York coming of age of the couple who for decades have been Cambridge literary salon keepers.

Anne Bernays grew up rich in the 1940s on New York's East Side, a spirited, secular Jewish girl descended from Freud. Her father, Ed Bernays, was known as "the father of public relations." Justin Kaplan, orphaned early, grew up on the West Side. Swimming into their respective careers, she worked at patrician Town & Country, moving later to the ambitious literary magazine discovery. Kaplan, a Harvard graduate-school dropout, worked with Max Schuster of Simon & Schuster. Bernays' and Kaplan's eventually overlapping lives in New York's publishing industry were a hurly burly of energy, social verve, liberalism and sexual mischief. The rising-famous—like Norman Mailer and Bernays' former boyfriend, the fascinating, original writer Anatole Broyard—swarm through the book, young and ambitious. Amid this, the authors charmingly find each other. He writes, "She wore a rosy red wool coat, and she had a rosy aura." She writes, "There was something about him that adhered, like the smell of strong perfume on a woman who has left the room." They make work and love back then sound fun.

THINK MINK

Suphi Fur buys, sells, refurbishes and stores furs. At 2 Belmont Street, Watertown (617-926-8803).

So gorgeously are these long, glossy furs lined up, it's as if a flock of movie stars had checked their coats in an especially opulent cloakroom. Suphi, a store that sells, buys, repairs and reconfigures furs, has a rack of mouthwateringly glamorous, full-length minks. Colors include black, mahogany, leopard-patterned and golden, and as you sweep the universe with your mink, you'll find it surprisingly light. The fox coats come in sexy pale colors and possess a supreme fluffy loftiness, making you want to wear one to accept your Oscar. Mink and beaver in "sheared" form feel super velvety to the touch. Shearling lamb, in coats and jackets for both sexes, offers that modestly luxurious peek of furriness in linings and collars. Short of a magnificent full coat, you can experience fur in the form of lush linings, removable cuffs and collars, muffs, vests, scarves, hats—they even offer fur on workaday denim. Suphi can even meet fur needs for princely children.

GETTING GOOD HELP, THESE DAYS

Angie's List rates local service companies. Membership costs $45 a year and includes a monthly newsletter. Call 617-535-8100 or go to www.angieslist.com.

Clean as a whistle—since a company cannot recommend itself—Angie's List is a service that rates service companies. The listed companies' offerings range from help we all need, like carpenters, handymen and tax consultants, to the more particular: seasonal Santa Clauses, blinds cleaning, mailbox repair and pony rides. Customers rate the services from A to F. Angie's List calls itself an "anti-referral" service; you get the facts, then you decide. Ratings are based on "overall service experience," prices, quality of work, responsiveness, punctuality and professionalism (e.g. cleanliness and courtesy). A B or higher qualifies as a good recommendation. You can use your own subjective needs to weigh the grades that people assign to companies: For example, people who lack local resources may not mind paying a higher price; others might tolerate slowness if the workers are professional. Also valuable is Angie's ability to warn and inform of negatively rated companies. Best of all, the ever-flowing feedback from members using these services serves as a "probation officer" noting bad—and good—business practices. And when trouble strikes, Angie's can intervene and look for a solution.

Chef Michael Burgess' South End boîte offers satisfying, earthy food at restrained prices

BY J. CHARLES MOKRISKI • PHOTOGRAPHS BY BERTA A. DANIELS

The South End is awash in restaurants, from the highly touted Hamersley's Bistro to the red-hot Rouge. How does a new bistro muscle its way into the starting rotation among such distinguished company? The Nightingale's formula is simple and sure: Give people well-conceived and professionally executed food at restrained prices in attractive and comfortable surroundings, and the word will get out to this food-conscious neighborhood and beyond. And so it has.

The Nightingale is ensconced in a double storefront on Tremont Street, in a space that housed the original Hamersley's. That is appropriate, because chef Michael Burgess was the sous chef at Hamersley's at this very location before moving on to Eat in Somerville and Vox Populi in the Back Bay. Now back in his old neighborhood and commanding the kitchen in his own place, which he co-owns with Kevin Scheehan, Burgess acquits himself with justified confidence and surefire culinary instincts.

The two-section dining room is simply but attractively decorated and furnished and accommodates about 50 patrons. A handsome black Windsor bench, flanked by a huge vase of colorful fresh flowers, stands by the entrance. A small bar with four stools dominates the smaller section, while an open kitchen looks out on the larger. Black-and-white woodwork, lime-green walls adorned with modern paintings and prints, high ceilings and a glass-paned enclosure for the front door to keep the wintry weather outside all help to create a low-key but engaging ambiance. White butcher paper covers the tables, and Baroque sconces with bronzed putti (Baroque cupid-like figurines) holding teardrop-shaped lights grace the walls.

The Nightingale's food is honest and straightforward. A timbale of chicken livers and foie gras, served with small rounds of eggy brioche toast ($8), was accompanied by a sweet-tart onion marmalade. The mixture was mostly chicken liver, with a texture that was light and feathery rather than rich and buttery. A more substantial appetizer was the grilled lamb kabobs ($9) with tamarind glaze and bulgur wheat salad. Two skewers of tender, rare morsels of lamb were served inside a slightly sweet and aromatic glaze that sealed in their juicy goodness. The salad, moist and minty, was a refreshing counterpoint to the sweet succulence of the lamb.

Mushroom lovers in our party reveled in the Nightingale's wild mushroom tart ($8). Tender, flaky crust encased a quiche of wild mushrooms with an intense, almost exotic woodsy flavor. An accompanying watercress salad suffered from a common cress problem—tough, ubiquitous stems—but the truffle oil dressing rescued the dish. Garlic soup ($6) was less provocative than it sounded, with the garlic mellow rather than assertive. The medium-weight broth was accented with red pepper coulis and a Parmesan crouton. Finally among the appetizers, the pan-roasted cod cake with aioli and arugula salad ($7) was first-rate, moist and tasty, and in its lightness, almost a seafood counterpart to the chicken liver timbale. Strips of sweet roasted red peppers enlivened with vinaigrette made a colorful and satisfying garnish.

Among the main courses, one of the most successful was the choucroute with pork loin and garlic sausage ($17). This was a hearty winter dish, with mellow, mildly sweet and smoky sauerkraut—certainly not sour as the name suggests, and as far removed from the briny garnish typically served on ballpark hot dogs as a Mozart symphony is from a pop song. The pork arrived as two thick, juicy fillets, and the garlic sausage was a coarse, earthy blend of herbs and meat. Sweet carrots and fingerling potatoes rounded out this bountiful, filling platter. Grainy mustard and cornichons (tiny pickles), served on the side, transported us to Alsace, the origin of this traditional peasant dish. Stuffed roasted chicken ($17) was a satisfying rendition of this quintessential comfort food and, at the same time, was a creative and distinctive expression of a standard. A sizable half-chicken, it came with savory stuffing that had somehow been inserted between the crisp skin and moist flesh of the bird. A garnish of flavorful green olives and a marvelous mountain of tender young greens with a well-balanced vinaigrette were the perfect vegetable accompaniments.

The final main course we sampled was the roasted cod loin, served with brandade ($17). This thick cut of boneless cod, firm and flavorful, was mounted on a layer of classic brandade, a creamy-textured puree of salt cod and potatoes. An unexpected dividend hid beneath the brandade—a pleasantly bitter mound of tender spinach. Indeed, for once the layered presentation seemed to make sense, given the particular combination of ingredients. The dish was garnished with four dollops of what the menu called "black olive vinaigrette." More like a soupy tapanade, it was visually off-putting, but its warm, Mediterranean flavors significantly enhanced our enjoyment of the fish.

The Nightingale has a well-constructed wine list, with many offerings priced in the $20s, and glasses available from $5 to $7. We enjoyed a decent 1999 Cote de Rhone Cave des Papes, a generous pour at $6. So ample were the portions at the Nightingale that we had to summon extra capacity to accommodate dessert. The effort was worth it, for it would have been a shame to leave without sampling the chocolate hazelnut terrine ($7), served with crème anglaise and crushed praline. This rich, intensely chocolate, dense but moist confection was the definitive punctuation mark at the end of a substantial, thoroughly satisfying meal. iB

Second Looks

Veggie Planet meets Planet of the "Aped"

BY CAROLYN FAYE FOX

Chef Didi Emmons of Veggie Planet is scouting out new locations.

Beware of imitations, warns Didi Emmons. The forthcoming Vegan Planet, whose cover bears a striking resemblance to Emmons' Vegetarian Planet, is not, in fact, her sequel.

"Oh God, my old publishing company," sighs Emmons, who opened her restaurant Veggie Planet in Harvard Square in 2001, a couple of years after her first cookbook was published. "I don't even want to lay eyes on it. Maybe they tried to capitalize on Veggie Planet."

Maybe? Check it out yourself on Amazon.com. Meanwhile, Emmons' second book, Entertaining for a Veggie Planet, is set to be published in June. Maybe a new book calls for a new restaurant (or vice versa), because Emmons is looking at prospective sites in Jamaica Plain. Emmons says her future, "more creative than pizza" venue will open "maybe by next Christmas."

At Harvest, executive chef Eric Brennan is finally back in the kitchen after a long bout with back trouble. Fortunately, he had three sous chefs to keep the pot boiling while he was horizontal, and now he's behind the stove preparing some intriguing new menu items. Grilled cider-brined pork T-bone is served with house-made "winter sauerkraut"—grated cabbage, Macomber turnips, rutabaga and celery root fermented for seven days, then cooked with white wine, bay leaf, juniper and bacon. Brennan and his team are also hot-smoking Arctic char in-house and pickling their own beets.

Speaking of fish, Legal Sea Foods will soon open yet another restaurant in the space of the former Giannino's, behind the Charles Hotel. What's really news is that the Legal folks would dearly love to pitch a big tent in the brick courtyard to shelter an outdoor raw bar in the summer months. We'll keep you posted.

Trend watch: As well-regarded restaurants in the city and suburbs continue to jump on the value-added bandwagon of prix fixe menus (Craigie Street Bistrot in Cambridge, Monica's in the North End, Lumiere in West Newton), the softening-toward-mushy economy has apparently prompted other places to downscale their menus. Barcode, initially a showcase for former executive chef George Leu's sophisticated French-Asian fusion dishes, now focuses on "more bar food...sandwiches, wraps, more American comfort food," according to assistant manager Jim Rodgers. It's both less expensive for diners and more cost-effective for Barcode's owners.

And Margo Bistro, whose first menu offered creative takes on New England seafood, has announced a new menu that includes chicken fingers and "mescaline salad." Have a nice trip.

Happy 20th birthday to Grill 23! While many local chefs were participating in the Boston DineAround, executive chef Jay Murray quietly traveled to New York City to cook up a James Beard House dinner for a sellout crowd. Expect a series of anniversary celebrations—wine dinners and other special events—to be announced soon.

Where are they now? Although chef Ed Doyle, formerly of Aura at the Seaport Hotel, had originally targeted April as the opening date for his own restaurant, he's now expecting a fall premiere, though he won't reveal any more details. Billie Boudreau, chef at the fabulous though short-lived 02129 in Charlestown and formerly pastry chef at Seasons, is living in the Berkshires and pondering a partnership with chef Tom Tenuta (of the former Cena near Symphony Hall) and his wife, Loretta Huguez, who opened El Pelon Taqueria in the Fenway several years ago. And Stephen Lancaster, whose full-flavored fare you may remember from the former David's in the Theater District, is now at the newly opened Soho in Brighton. iB

MMM...CHOCOLATE

What is it about February that makes us crave chocolate? Could it be the nearly sub-zero temperatures? Or the impending Valentine's holiday? Or could it be that we simply use these facts as excuses to over-indulge? This month, there are more than a few cocoa-related events happening in the region. Some you have to travel to, like the Chocolate and Wine Tasting in Hull on Feb. 8. One, the Chocolate Trolley Tour, takes you to the chocolate, stopping at three locations (including Le Meridien's Chocolate Bar) for dessert. Bread & Circus offers Chocolate Fest, a day of demonstrations, samples and activities all related to chocolate, on Feb. 8. But our favorite is Death by Chocolate, a tasting of chocolate from Icing on the Cake, Geoff & Drew's Incredible Cookies, Cabot's Ice Cream and Pizzi Farm Stand, among others. •Chocolate Tasting: *Clarion Nantasket Beach Hotel and Conference Center, 45 Hull Shore Drive, Hull (781-925-9793). Education: Presidential Affairs

With all this talk about frivolities like love, chocolate and valentines, we thought we'd mention something a trifle more heavy-hitting that's happening over at the John F. Kennedy Library and Museum. Historians, journalists, family members of former presidents and members of their administrations will be in town to speak at the Presidential Tapes Conference. Guests will include Bob Woodward, Michael Beschloss, John Dean, David Eisenhower, Richard Reeves, Lynda Johnson Robb, Hugh Sidey and Brian Williams. Discussions will focus on what the taped presidential conversations reveal about crucial moments in the nation's history, such as the Cuban missile crisis, the Vietnam War, the civil rights movement and the Nixon resignation. Former administrative staffers will share their views on listening to those recordings today in contrast with their first-hand experiences as participants in original discussions. And journalists who covered the White House will provide their perspectives on historic events now that they're privy to off-the-record Oval Office conversations. Columbia Point, Boston (617-514-1644). Feb. 16, 1-5:30pm; Feb. 17, 9am-5pm. Free (reservations required).

CityScope: Party Like It's 1978!

In the current Old Farmer's Almanac, senior editor Mare-Anne Jarvela predicts "a major blizzard of the likes of the Blizzard of '78 hitting us the second week of February." The historic blizzard pounded the East Coast with 27.1 inches of snow, killing 54 people and inflicting $1 billion of damage upon the region. Of course, we're not looking for a storm that dangerous—but if it's going to be Ice Age cold, give us a bit of the white stuff, we say. You'll find us reflecting on Mother Nature's force with the rest of the IMPROPER gang, plus last issue's bachelorette covergal Kelly Malone of Mix 98.5, at Hurricane O'Reilly's Blizzard of '78 party Feb. 6. There'll be a '70s fashion show produced by the IMPROPER's fashion editor, Samantha House (including a special performance of "Feva-Las Vegas" by "Elvis"), and prizes will be awarded for best '70s costume. FYI: Bone up on your blizzard trivia at a lecture by WBZ-TV meteorologist Bruce Schwoegler at the Old South Meeting House earlier that day. 150 Canal St, Boston (617-722-0161). 7pm. $5 (or bring winter apparel to donate to the Pine Street Inn). Old South Meeting House, 310 Washington St., Boston (617-482-6439). 12:15pm. $5.

CityScope: Sexy Singles

Has cupid left you high and dry this February? Forget the chubby little boy and take matters into your own hands by attending any of these Valentine's Day activities for singles on the prowl. On Feb. 11, make a last-ditch effort to end your singlehood at the 8-Minute Dating Cupid Parties held at Limbo, Kennedy's Midtown and Fire and Ice. You can also join author Steve Almond for Girls' Night Out, a workshop on writing an effective personal ad at Salon 350. Or simply buy a date with a male bartender at the Valentine's Day Male Auction at Hurricane O'Reilly's Feb. 13. On Feb. 14, there's the Flirt Fest at the Big Easy or the Red Party at Felt (complete with a lingerie fashion show). Meanwhile, Lucy's restaurant in Brookline hosts a Valentine's Day Singles Dinner. After each course, diners switch tables and meet someone else. If all else fails, you can always catch Wendy Liebman's performance at the Comedy Connection. She's sure to have some strong opinions on love and romance that may make you glad you're still single. See CityScope on page 48 and Comedy on page 54 for more information.

FRI./FEB. 14

Film: What's Up, Romeo?

This year, options are bountiful for a cinematic experience on Valentine's Day. Most guys know that it's the opening day of Ben Affleck's comic book adaptation, Daredevil. We hope some of you Y-chromosomers are forsaking opening night in favor of a romantic dinner. But for those of you bent on seeing a Valentine's Day movie, the Brattle Theatre offers Casablanca and the Bugs Bunny Film Fest with the Tasmanian Devil, Sylvester, Tweety, Yosemite Sam and crew. (Here's a tidbit to impress your date: Bugs' famous line "Of course you know this means war" was actually stolen from Groucho Marx.) If you've made other plans for Feb. 14, don't sweat it. The Bugs repertoire runs through Feb. 21. And on Sunday, Feb. 16, the Brattle celebrates its 50th anniversary by offering a Bugs matinee for only 80 cents. 40 Brattle St., Cambridge (617-876-6837).

THROUGH FEB. 9

Performing Arts: What's Next?

The 30-year-old Swiss theater troupe Mummenschanz provides a rare form of wordless entertainment that is bound to render Bostonians speechless. A brand-new installment of the historic show, Mummenschanz Next, debuts at the Wilbur Theatre this month, and it's like nothing you've ever seen. The black-clad, five-member troupe of Mummenschanz (which roughly translates as "masquerade" in German) takes common everyday objects—like rolls of toilet paper, bean bags, cardboard boxes and long-handled scrub brushes—and turns them into fantastical puppet creatures. They get their message across without words, using mime, puppetry, masks, dance and theater, to tell intriguing, humorous stories. Wilbur Theatre, 246 Tremont St., Boston (617-931-2787). Tue.-Fri., 7:30pm; Sat.-Sun., 2 and 7:30pm. Through Feb. 9. $25-$57.

SAT./FEB. 1–SAT./FEB. 22

Performing Arts: Love's Labor's Lost

Duplicitous lovers. Torrid affairs. The thin line between love and hate. These ultimate anti-Valentine's Day themes all come together in La Dispute, a play by 18th-century French playwright Marivaux and directed by Anne Bogart at the American Repertory Theatre. The play is a sort of Adam and Eve story, set in a Garden of Eden filled with love and lust. The story goes like this: A group of meddling aristocrats try to simulate the conditions of the Garden of Eden to determine who is more unfaithful in love—men or women. Two men and two women, who share the unlikely distinction of having been raised in isolation from the opposite sex, are released into the same garden to see who falls for whom (and who cheats first). You can guess what happens—a massive love quadrangle. Some deep-thinkers will no doubt unearth the play's themes of biological determinism and developmental psychology, but we're happy to sit back just watch how badly love can stink. 64 Brattle St., Cambridge (617-547-8300). $34-$68.

FRI./FEB. 14 AND SUN./FEB. 16

Classical Music: A Jazz Valentine

Still haven't made plans for the big day? We've got a harmonic outing sure to encourage amorous feelings from your date. Take him or her to hear to the music of one of the greatest jazz trumpeters of all time at Symphony Hall. The Handel and Haydn Society celebrates V Day with a concert titled A Jazz Valentine: Dizzy Gillespie Alumni All-Stars. For the program, Gillespie's legendary band performs jazz standards, and the Handel and Haydn Orchestra throws in a Baroque trumpet repertoire to honor the master trumpeter. Feb. 14, 8pm; Feb. 16, 3pm. Symphony Hall, 301 Mass. Ave., Boston (617-266-3605). $21-$56.

SAT./FEB. 8

CityScope: Monte Carlo Night

You've certainly heard about the city's many fancy-schmantzy charity bashes, and you've probably even attended some. You know, the kind of party where women strut about in their Chanel dresses, men parade about in Hugo Boss, and Cristal is poured like water. But Cam and Paulina Neely's black-tie bash is taking it up another notch. Their bacchanal, Betting on a Cause and a Cure, is a Monte Carlo–themed fund-raiser at the Charles Hotel that supports three celebrity-led causes: the Cam Neely Foundation for Cancer Care, the Leary Firefighters Foundation and the Michael J. Fox Foundation for Parkinson's Research. Celeb guests will include Michael J. Fox, Denis Leary, Dan Aykroyd and Ray Liotta. The evening includes a cocktail reception, dinner, gaming with celebrity dealers, a live auction, midnight entertainment and a chance to win a 2003 Mercedes CLK 320. A bonus: A room at the hotel and Sunday brunch are included in the ticket price. Charles Hotel, One Bennett St., Cambridge (617-346-5900). 6pm. $2,500 per person.

Tastings: C'mon Get Hungry

After compiling our list of more than 100 brunch spots in Greater Boston for our year-end issue, we've been on a real brunch kick. Our mouths water just thinking of eggs Benedict, blueberry pancakes and made-to-order omelettes, not to mention pitchers of spicy Bloody Marys. Now we finally have an excuse to get ourselves out of bed at a decent hour and indulge our fantasies. The Greater Boston Food Bank hosts its annual Super Hunger Brunch. "Do brunch" at one of more than 50 restaurants, including the Fireplace, Azure, the Bay Tower Room, Blu and the Capital Grille, for just $20, $25 or $35 (depending on the restaurant), and 100 percent of the proceeds will go to hunger relief efforts in the city. *(617-427-5200). www.gbfb.org. Film: Monsters and Mayhem

If you haven't yet experienced the annual 24-Hour Science Fiction Marathon—1,440 solid minutes of sci-fi movies, contests, prizes and surprises—you're in for a treat. The monster mash began 27 years ago, and each year, the theater is sold out by more than 600 SF diehards and newcomers alike. While moviegoers are free to leave the theater for breaks, most don't want to. The crowd is dedicated (there is a costume contest in the wee hours of the morning), and generally well behaved. You can expect some heckling of the B movies and the occasional one-liner shouted out. This year's line-up fuses new movies and older movies, blockbusters and bombs. The following are booked so far: Equilibrium, Metropolis, Minority Report, Screamers and Seconds. Coolidge Corner Theatre, 290 Harvard St., Brookline (617-734-2500). $50. www.bostonsci-fi.com.

THE ROAD TO LONDON

Chan and Wilson kick it old school in Shanghai Knights

BY PAUL SHERMAN

Jackie Chan reached blockbuster status in the United States in the Rush Hour movies with Chris Tucker. But Chan's brand of action-comedy made its most creative and amusing transition to Hollywood in another buddy comedy—the more moderately successful Shanghai Noon, his Wild West pairing with the inimitable Owen Wilson. That thrill ride threw a determined Chinese Imperial Guard in search of a kidnapped princess together with an eager but inept train robber in 1880s Nevada. It put its stars through familiar mismatched-buddy movie paces, but the chemistry between businesslike Chan and easily distracted Wilson was so funny and affectionate the movie was a blast.

Chan and Wilson reprise their roles of Chon Wang and Roy O'Bannon in Shanghai Knights, and despite a slow start, the follow-up is another example of how their chemistry freshens up the most worn out material. The sequel starts with an evil English lord (Gary Oldman wannabe Aidan Gillen) murdering Wang's father (Kim Chan) and stealing the treasured Chinese Imperial Seal seal. Wang's sister (Fann Wong) gets word to him in Carson City, and Wang stops off in New York to grab Roy, whom Wang is stunned to find working as a "waiter-gigolo" after badly investing the pair's money. The three meet up in Victorian London to seek revenge on the killer, and they turn up plenty of malice in the palace.

Jackie Chan (bottom) and Owen Wilson combine comic relief and action as they avenge a murder/ robbery in Shanghai Knights.

But don't expect anything special from the plot. That's not the meat of Shanghai Knights. It's the bread. The meat is in the scrapes Wang and Roy get into and in the differences of opinion they have (mainly over Roy's crush on Wang's sister). And most of all it's in how Chan and Wilson play those scrapes and beefs. Considering that each actor just came off excruciating buddy comedies—Chan with Jennifer Love Hewitt in The Tuxedo and Wilson with Eddie Murphy in I Spy—it's obvious that chemistry between stars isn't a science—it's kismet that's either there or isn't.

It's hard to believe any other pair could do so much with the comedy schtick Shanghai Knights dusts off. At one point, Wang and Roy sneak into the evil lord's mansion, where real eyes spy at them through paintings and they keep ending up on different sides of a revolving fireplace that leads to a secret sanctum. Wang fights off henchmen (in one of many outstanding martial arts sequences) while Roy wonders where he went. Later, they end up tied together upside down over the Thames, bickering as they try to escape drowning. This stuff is so old, you keep expecting the Three Stooges to run in, yet Chan and Wilson still wring laughs from this vintage comedy-team material.

Although Shanghai Knights succeeds in comic archeology, and although it's silly to expect historical accuracy from a series that's made a running gag of Roy mishearing Chon Wang's name as "John Wayne," the historical free-for-all in Shanghai Knights can annoy. At times, you're not sure the movie-makers even realize they're being inaccurate, as when they use ragtime music in the 1880s New York scenes. Then there's the intentional and distracting use of 1960s British Invasion songs (like the Who's "Magic Bus" and The Zombies' "Time of the Season") for the London action. At least the too-early references to motion pictures and automobiles and the run-ins with Charlie Chaplin (Aaron Johnson), Arthur Conan Doyle (Tom Fisher) and Jack the Ripper (Oliver Cotton) have comic payoffs.

In all the best ways, though, Chan and Wilson's Shanghai movies are successors to Bob Hope and Bing Crosby's legendary Road pictures. If you watch any of those today, you might be struck by how flimsy the stories are, but amazed at how much charge Hope and Crosby's camaraderie brings to them. The same is true here. Shanghai Noon was hardly a big hit, so the decision to make Shanghai Knights may have stemmed more from the first's quality than its balance sheet. I'd like to think everyone involved realized they'd hit upon something special and didn't want to stop. I'm ready for more. iB

BY PAUL SHERMAN

About Schmidt ★★★
Alexander Payne's latest doesn't have the satiric sting of his previous Citizen Ruth and Election, but it never tries to. Instead, it's a quietly disarming story of a 66-year-old Omaha insurance executive (Jack Nicholson) who's put out to pasture by his company and whose wife suddenly dies, and who discovers something he would have never admitted to himself before: that he doesn't like how his life turned out. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Adaptation ★★★½
Another inspired mindbender from the guys who made Being John Malkovich. This time, director Spike Jonze and writer Charlie Kaufman have made a movie loosely based on a book, but it's also a movie about trying to film that book. It follows Kaufman (a terrific Nicolas Cage) in his desperate struggle to turn Susan Orlean's The Orchid Thief into a screenplay, and comes up with the funniest, shrewdest peek into the creative process in years. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Antwone Fisher ★★★
Denzel Washington's directorial debut doesn't stray very far from putting a more feel-good spin on the Good Will Hunting formula, and Washington himself plays the Navy shrink who, a la GWH, learns from his patient as he helps him work through his emotional baggage. But the movie's no-frills sincerity works, and as the title character, newcomer Derek Luke has an endearing lack of polish. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Catch Me If You Can ★★★
Run, Leo, Run. DiCaprio plays a 1960s teen con man in a Steven Spielberg movie that, refreshingly, just tries to be brisk entertainment. DiCaprio's character turns to cons—bank fraud, impersonating an airline pilot and a doctor—after suffering the downward mobility of his family and the break-up of his parents (Christopher Walken, Nathalie Baye). It can seem like the shallow version of The Talented Mr. Ripley, but it's an intoxicating ride. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Chicago ★★★
Life is still a cabaret in this movie based on a later Kander-Ebb musical. That's the whole premise of this lusty, laugh-filled spoof of Roaring Twenties Chicago in which a singing star (and murderess), a star wannabe (and murderess) and a flashy lawyer (and defender of murderesses) all fight for the spotlight and the headlines. Renée Zellweger is the wannabe who discovers murder was a great career move, Catherine Zeta Jones is the singer trying to keep her name alive while in jail and a surprisingly amusing Richard Gere is the upscale shyster with all the answers. All three know just how to manipulate truth, justice and the American way through performance. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

City of God ★★★½
Remember the lifesaving jolt of adrenalin Eric Stoltz shoots into Uma Thurman in Pulp Fiction? To moviegoers numbed by the blah forgettableness of most movies, this Brazilian dynamo is that jolt. The title refers to the Rio de Janeiro slum, as godforsaken a place as you'll ever find, where the action takes place. But the movie is as rich as its setting is impoverished. Bold and brutal from start to finish, its dog-eat-dog world and stylistic energy recall Mean Streets and Amores Perros as its stories stories crisscross and bubble into each other, and as 18-year-old hero Rocket (Alexandre Rodrigues) tries to get out of his crime-rocked neighborhood alive. Full of humanity, ambiguity and belligerence, it's a wonderfully orchestrated car crash that you can't take your eyes off of. (At Kendall Square.)

Confessions of a Dangerous Mind ★★★
Based on Chuck Barris' "unauthorized autobiography," George Clooney's directorial debut is an absurd trip inside the fried mind of the Dating Game and Newlywed Game creator, Gong Show host and part-time CIA assassin. What's that, you didn't know Chuckie Baby knocked off 30-odd undesirables in 15 years of clandestine service to Uncle Sam? Well, maybe he did and maybe he didn't. That's the fun thing about the movie, which captures the patchwork structure and stream-of-consciousness tussle with reality of Barris' book. Clooney has Adaptation screenwriter Charlie Kaufman handling script chores here and a fittingly frazzled Sam Rockwell as Barris. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Far From Heaven ★★
Todd Haynes' drama lovingly recreates the glossy world of Douglas Sirk, whose brilliant 1950s Technicolor melodramas, such as All That Heaven Allows, meticulously presented post-war suburbia as a superficially rich yet emotionally stifled community. Haynes attempts to up the ante by surrounding housewife Julianne Moore with a husband (Dennis Quaid) no longer able to deny his homosexuality and a potential interracial and class-crossing romance with a sensitive black gardener (Dennis Haysbert). But save for the overt mention of homosexuality, Sirk's critiques of narrow-mindedness covered all of this ground before. (At Copley Place, Kendall Square and suburbs.)

Gangs of New York ★★
Daniel Day Lewis is the epitome of a charismatic villain in Martin Scorsese's long-awaited 19th-century story. So why is this epic still just a lot of sound and fury signifying nothing but production design and more production design? Maybe it's the familiar this-time-it's-personal plot with Leonardo DiCaprio as an Irish-American returning to the Lower East Side to wreak vengeance on Lewis, who killed his dad (Liam Neeson). Maybe it's the wasting of Cameron Diaz as the woman each man covets. Maybe it's Scorsese's obsession with minute historical detail, at the expense of conveying what it's all about. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

A Guy Thing ★★½
A Meet the Parents knock-off that's surprisingly enjoyable. The central plot involving Jason Lee, fiancée Selma Blair and her cousin Julia Stiles (with whom Lee thinks he's slept after his bachelor party) is unremarkable at its center. But much of the comedy comes from supporting players such as James Brolin as Blair's hard-nosed dad, Thomas Lennon as Lee's lovelorn brother and Larry Miller as a perpetually disgusted clergyman. Lee also fares much better here than he did with a similar role in the painful Stealing Harvard. It's not original, it's often not very funny, but this romantic comedy musters more charm than most McMovies manage. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Just Married ★★
It must be fear of being a chick flick that causes this romantic comedy to inject toilet humor at just about every opportunity. Too bad, too, because Brittany Murphy and Ashton Kutcher have an appealing chemistry together. But this story of their nightmarish honeymoon in Europe is too lazy to offer much more than stock characters, unoriginal gags (we all already saw a dog dive out a window in There's Something About Mary) and fart jokes. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Lord of the Rings: The Two Towers ★½
A whole lot of Dungeons & Dragons mumbo jumbo writ bombastically large. This series has had close to six hours to make me care about anything happening in it, and I still don't care a lick. Frodo can go bury the damn ring in the ground and go for a swim, for all I care. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Max ★★★
Writer-director Menno Meyjes offers bracing speculative drama in his story set in Munich following World War I. The title character is Max Rothman (John Cusack), a fictional Jewish art dealer who's embraced the period's modern art. He befriends another war veteran, an aspiring artist—and, it turns out, emerging fascist—named Adolf Hitler (Noah Taylor). Terrifically acted by the two leads and full of crisp dialogue, the movie engagingly addresses the relationship between creative expression, happiness and politics. It also offers the intriguing theory that Hitler might not have turned to extreme politics had he succeeded at art. (At Kendall Square and Copley Place.)

National Security ★★
Martin Lawrence and Steve Zahn keep it respectable, but this film puts little creative twist on its very creaky, mismatched-buddy-cop formula. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

The Pianist ★★★
It's the little moments in Roman Polanski's Holocaust drama that make it work, like when a hungry family of six on their way to a concentration camp matter-of-factly carves up and shares a small piece of candy. Based on the memoirs of late Polish musician and Holocaust survivor Wladyslaw Szpilman, played here by Adrien Brody, the movie powerfully shows the gradual whittling away of Polish Jews' human rights (and humanity) once the Nazis invaded in 1939. It also details how the title character managed to stay alive, through being stripped of rights and crammed into the Warsaw ghetto, seeing his family "deported" to concentration camps, and hiding out for months at a time while locked into apartments the Nazis think are empty. For better or worse, the hero is a passive character who says little; but his path through history is involving. (At Copley Place, Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and West Newton.)

The Quiet American ★★★
The tragic legacy of U.S. "nation-building" abroad comes home powerfully in Philip Noyce's adaptation of Graham Greene's 1950s Vietnam-set thriller. Michael Caine plays the British journalist stationed in Saigon whose relationship to his second home and his young mistress (Do Thi Hai Yen) has a paternalistic sense of entitlement. Along comes Brendan Fraser as the title character, an idealistic U.S. medical aid worker who befriends the journalist and wins away his lover. The American also happens always to be in the right place at the right time, and it's soon clear that he's up to more than he says and is at the heart of American meddling in the battle between the French and Vietnamese. Although the movie works better on a historical level than a personal level—it expects us to sympathize with the "impartial" Englishman much more than seems possible—it's a shrewd, outspoken drama. (At Kendall Square.)

Talk to Her ★★
As usual, Pedro Almodovar's latest has saturated colors and saturated emotions. It centers around two men in relationships with women who are comatose: a male nurse (Javier Camara) infatuated with his patient (Leonor Waitling), and a writer (Dario Grandinetti) whose matador lover (Rosario Flores) has been gored by a bull. If Almodovar hopes to wring pathos out of the nearly asexual nurse's increasingly twisted love for his patient, he fails. (At Kendall Square and Coolidge Corner.)

25th Hour ★★
There are interesting elements in Spike Lee's latest—including Edward Norton's protagonist and the setting of a wounded, post-9/11 New York City—but the story never really comes together. Norton plays a drug dealer sorting out his life before he starts serving a prison sentence, and those around him include girlfriend Rosario Dawson, buddies Barry Pepper and Philip Seymour Hoffman and dad Brian Cox. The relationships among the characters just aren't that convincing, though occasionally the film breaks into lively sequences. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Soon-to-be-married Karen (Selma Blair) and Paul (Jason Lee) try to get to the bottom of his cold feet in Chris Koch's new comedy, A Guy Thing.

LOUD-MOUTHED GIRL

Kathleen Edwards makes noise in the alt-country world with her hard-bitten debut album

BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

The September after she graduated from high school, aspiring musician Kathleen Edwards headed for the tattoo parlor, to get a guitar etched between her shoulder blades.

"It was exactly what I wanted to have on my body, to remind myself when I'm 50 that I once felt that way, in case I ever stopped," says the 24-year-old Canadian. "And the way it's going right now, I won't have to have that reminder."

Edwards has good reason for her sudden confidence in her career choice. Rolling Stone named her one of 10 artists to watch in 2003, and Edwards performed on The Late Show with David Letterman the same week that her Zoe/Rounder debut, Failer, was released to glowing reviews last month.

"It's kinda constant, having things happen that obviously I didn't think would happen to me at all, even in a lifetime," says Edwards, who plays T.T. the Bear's Place Feb. 18, then opens for fellow alt-country upstart Kasey Chambers at the Orpheum Theatre March 1. "So that's pretty overwhelming."

It all started around the time of the tattoo, when Edwards began writing songs and playing coffee shops. She had been trained on violin since age five, a talent that led her to arrange and play some string parts on Failer. But her inspiration was more classic rock than classical music.

Kathleen Edwards' well reviewed new release, Failer, straddles country and roots-rock.

"The stuff that stuck with me was stuff I realized that I'd been listening to for some time, and that was always the roots-rock stuff," says Edwards, citing Tom Petty, Bob Dylan, Neil Young, Ryan Adams' old band Whiskeytown and Canadian roots-rocker Jim Bryson, who played on Failer.

Learning to play guitar by ear, Edwards was also influenced by Ani DiFranco's percussive finger-picking. But, she says, "I really connected more with male singer-songwriters," raising the issue of the frequent comparisons to Lucinda Williams that she receives. "She was never someone I listened to or was influenced by. I can totally understand why people do align me [with her], which is basically a gender-based alignment, and obviously a huge compliment. But it wasn't a gender thing for me."

Edwards wrote most of Failer in a rented house in rural Quebec, where she moved to escape the city—and a breakup with a boyfriend. "Every day before I served tables in the evening, I would take my truck up there and drive around. I was just dying to have a little bit of space and peace and quiet. I was living at a loud, busy intersection in Ottawa. I couldn't sleep at night, and I got up there and realized how tired I was, and how distracted. It took me about a month to adjust, but it was like a breath of fresh air."

If the hectic schedule of promoting a new CD on the road sounds a lot like what she was escaping, the daughter of a Canadian diplomat isn't worried. "I grew up overseas, so I was constantly being thrown into new places and situations and new faces," says Edwards, calling from a Manhattan hotel. "That's not new to me and it doesn't make me uncomfortable. But I will say, as much as I love waking up and having New York at my disposal to hang out for the day, I also really love waking up in the country. I'm really lucky to have the best of both worlds."

On Failer, Edwards straddles country atmosphere and roots-rock edginess, singing hard-bitten lyrics in her weathered warble. "Every song has an element of my life in it, so in that sense, a lot of the songs are incredibly personal," she says. "Sometimes it's an observation that I had, that had nothing to do with me, but it was still something in my life. I was able to understand and expose the moment."

So lines about a hard-drinking lifestyle or "a loud-mouthed girl" hit close to home for Edwards, who also admits there is truth and exaggeration in "Westby," which details an affair with an older, married man. But being pregnant by the man who shoots himself in "Six O'Clock News" is another story.

"[That's] about a time where there were all these husbands and ex-husbands locking their wives up in their homes at gunpoint, with their children standing right next to them," she says. "It was just sorta putting myself in that place."

Edwards dedicated the CD to her late grandmother, a farmer-activist whom she credits for her own fiery independence. "My mouth gets me into trouble," she says. "I can be a bit of a stubborn bitch, but I'm only calling myself that. No one has ever called me that because... I don't know why. I'm strong-headed, and I am in some ways very ambitious and focused right now. This is my dream. I've worked for it." iB

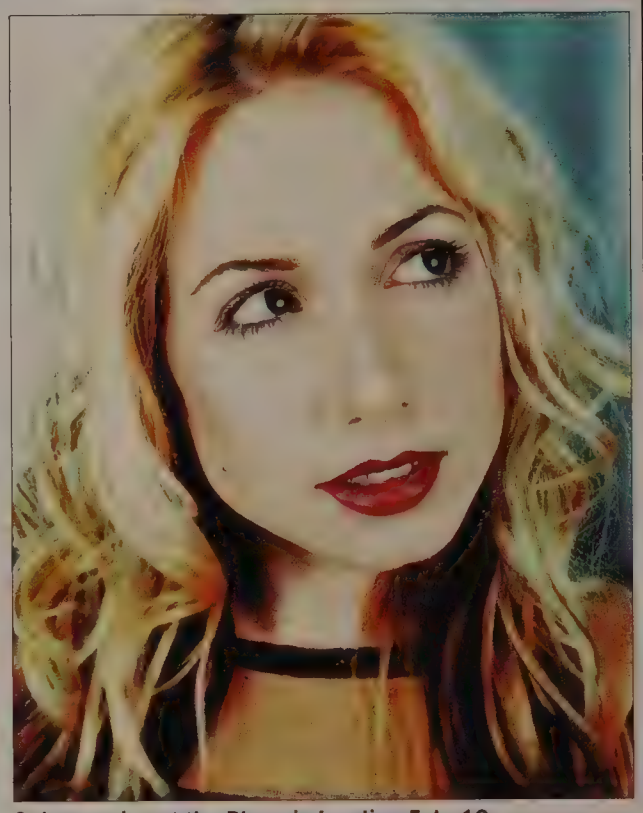
Bump on into Phoenix Landing

DJ Colette takes you for a spin

If you've heard Drifting Into View, last year's stunning debut album from Boston-based tech-house artist Morgan Page, then you already know that Colette is a talented and classy vocalist. Colette's voice can be heard on "All I Need," the first single from the album. If you make your way to Bump at the Phoenix Landing on Sunday, Feb. 16, you'll discover that Colette is also a talented and classy house music DJ.



Colette spins at the Phoenix Landing Feb. 16.

DJ Colette definitely does things her own way. Not satisfied with the limitations of typical dance music job categories like DJ or producer, Colette has blazed her own trail through the house music scene—a trail that has led from her hometown of Chicago to dance floors around the world. In 1997, she co-founded the groundbreaking women's DJ collective SuperJane with fellow Chicago DJs Dayhota, Heather, and Lady D. Today, Colette is known as much for her Chicago-inflected DJ sets as she is for her lilting vocal work on an ever-growing number of house music records. Recording her own original productions, as well as working for other well-known house music acts, Colette keeps herself busy in the recording studio. Sometimes summery and ethereal, sometimes downright sultry, her voice is instantly recognizable. When she's not performing a DJ set in Dublin or ensconced in the recording studio, you can find Colette hosting a weekly dance music show on KIIS-FM 102.7 in Los Angeles.

Despite her busy schedule, Colette plans to release her own full-length debut album in just a few months. "I'm expecting the album to be out later in the spring," she says. "It features collaborations with CPEN, Home & Garden, DJ Heather, Angel Alanis and Pete Moss. Musically, it spans everything from the dancefloor to downtempo. It's a new direction for me in terms of doing songwriting, one that I've been excited to work on for a long time."

Hopefully, Bump-goers will be treated to a preview of some music from the new album. Bump resident DJ Arturo warms it up, so be sure to arrive early.

Improper Impersonals

If everyone kept their feelings bottled up like warm beer, we'd soon have antisocial behavior exploding all over the place and ruining the upholstery. So send us your letters of love and spleen, and we'll print them for the world to see (Impersonals may be edited for taste, space a clarity). Heck, it's better than making a fool of yourself in person. And IT'S FREE! Pick up a p or keyboard (hint: we like the fact that we don't have to type up e-mailed messages) and write

Jake at Il Panino
January, fourth floor, 11:30pm at Il Panino. You met a mystery woman. We danced and kissed the night away. Sorry for leaving like Cinderella. I'll be on the fourth floor on Saturdays waiting to dance with you again.

Scared Kenmore Girl
It was a windy Sunday evening close to 9pm. I was on the B Line going to meet a friend. You got on the T with a big white bag filled with papers, sat right next to me and kept looking over until I got off at the Kenmore stop. You then started to follow me saying "I like pretty girls. I like pretty girls." Then I quickly walked up the stairs and you continued to follow me. You introduced yourself as "Michael Michael I like motorcycle." I got scared and ran into the McDonalds for safety and you began to bang on the windows. Finally, you left. Please, if you ever see me again or any other girls do not go following them. You really scared me.
—Tracie

New Year's Eve at the Rack
While other girls were content with getting a New Year's kiss and moving along, you tried to make conversation. Unfortunately, it was too loud and chaotic to hear much. I know that your name is Liz and you're in Boston to get a PhD, though. And I may be wrong, but I believe that you're from Lincoln and were at the Rack with two female friends. You also confessed to seeing my friends and I play pool earlier in the evening. You're tall, blond and attractive... and after toasting champagne at midnight you returned to your friends saying, "If you want to talk, I'll be over there." Although I found you briefly on a trip to the bar, I lost you later when it mattered most: when things began to settle down after the midnight rush and I was hoping to have a real conversation. If you happen to read this, I hope we can meet again in a more subdued atmosphere for that elusive opportunity.

D-line
To the T operator who made my Jan. 14 ride home from work memorable. Thanks for cracking everyone up by mispronouncing every stop on the D Line with your Barry White-meets-the-Movie-phone-guy-from-France voice. The cherry on top however, had to be your announcement at Ressss-iv-voir to "Please be sure to remove all your belongings from the train, as anything left on the T will become my late Christmas gifts."

Vince Vaughn Lookalike
Dec. 17 at karaoke night at the Milky Way: You look like Vince Vaughn, with a cowboy hat on. We chatted for a bit when I complimented you on your choice of "Stand by Your Man." Me, long dark-brown hair, white ruffled button-down and black lace pants. I was with the Christmas party from Figs. I know your name is Eric and I haven't been back to the Milky Way since, but why not e-mail me and avoid the cover charge—not that I wouldn't want to hear you sing again. I can't get you out of my mind. You were with two other women, friends I presume. Please, someone, tell him to e-mail me!
—celad@msn.com

The Girl on the Hill
Every time I think of you I smile, when I see you I begin to shine and being with you makes my heart dance. The last year with you has been the most amazing time in my life and that is because of what you have opened inside of me. You are the girl I have dreamed about falling in love with, and more importantly, you are my best friend. I want us to be together, so let me take your hand in mine and let's walk together.
—youcan callme_tyty @yahoo.com

Chris from South Carolina
Our eyes met by chance that random weeknight a few months ago at Common Ground. I was leaving with my roommate, but I went back inside. I figured, how often does a person get that kind of look? We spoke for a while... I even carded you and your roommate! Just before I left (again), you asked me for my number and I scribbled it toward the end of your journal. Did you lose my number... or just lose interest?
—penultimatepage@yahoo.com

Mr. Lawyer Man
At the West St. Grille and later at Christopher's, you asked for my number after telling me how you asked two dozen "Michael Vick fans" for their phone numbers. Get a clue! I wouldn't go out with you for all the free USA Todays in America! Besides, your polo shirt and love of Reagan were bizarre. Be careful who you try to impress, as most women don't like being rapped to!
—iapologize@hotmail.com

Admired You at the Sports Grille Jan. 19
You were the cutest guy at the Sports Grille near the Fleet duri the NFC Championship game a I could not take my eyes off you think you were rooting for the Eagles. You were wearing a dar baseball cap with a USPS/Nike logo, a tan v-neck sweater and black leather jacket. You also have the nicest smile I've seen a long time. You were with frien then watched some games by yourself and by the time I got u the nerve to talk to you, you had scooted out. If you're reading th I was the girl who couldn't help but admire you and smile.
—nomar_loyal@yahoo.com

Damsel in Distress
Allison, Nov. 12, Mt. Auburn Hospital emergency room: You ca in for chin stitches, the result of a bizarre volleyball incident. My frie was there for a nose job. It was there that I was exposed to your infectious smile. I had all the symptoms—rapid heartbeat, dilated pupils and sweaty palms. I'm not looking for a cure but I ha been searching for the cause. My prognosis was that by offering yo my card you would contact me. Before I hemorrhage from kicking myself for not asking a damsel in distress for her number, please call Show-Off, stat!
—Show-Off

Icelandair
You were on the same flight to Iceland on Dec. 30. You sat acros from me at the gate and then on row ahead of me on the plane. I was seated next to a talkative American who liked to discuss hi travels and I was pretty sure you were eavesdropping. I was wishi I was sitting next to you instead. You are tall, blonde and blue-eye You may not even be American or living in Boston. I got on a connecting flight to London in Iceland. I'm not sure where you were headed from Iceland. We made eye contact plenty of times but never spoke. If by chance you do live in Boston and happen to read this, e-mail me.
—icelandairgirl@hotmail.com.

To the Nicest Man
I wish right now I could get your pain away from you. You do not deserve this pain because you are the nicest man. I wish I could take away your mother's sickness and put it on me. Ask me to do anythin for you and I will do it right away. My family and I are with you and your family every minute.

Rockie Horoscope

FEBRUARY 5 – 18, 2003

AQUARIUS JANUARY 21-FEBRUARY 18

Happy birthday. There's precious little you can't pull off, no matter how wild or chaotic it may appear. February is the one time of year when rebels and kooks find favor with the public, when ordinary expectations don't squelch creative, anarchistic expression. Take advantage; the spotlight is on you, your ideals and what makes you different. Support, if you need it, comes from a generous co-worker; and your lover or child can be the steadying influence that'll keep you within the limits of the law. Great fun.

PISCES

FEBRUARY 19-MARCH 19

Precious "Eureka moments" may be more frequent this month, simply because of the cosmic energy that's focused on your higher mind, not on day-to-day doings and other trivial pursuits. Physicists and philosophers (the preferred professions of the Fish) will thrill to the possibilities that open up while the sun travels through inventive, iconoclastic Aquarius. Electronic wizards and enthusiastic lovers may already be anticipating the goodies due during the Valentine's Day/Presidents Day weekend. Yippee!

ARIES

MARCH 20-APRIL 19

The idealistic Aquarius new moon may have inspired you to turn a creative impulse or your sympathy for a community cause into an everyday activity. But be sure that your approach is your own, that it's not diluted by vaporous Neptunian vibes. Unless you're aspiring to sainthood, in which case you'll need whatever spin you can get from PR people big on hooey and hierarchy. Also watch out for the Ram's latent militancy, your "my way or the highway" attitude. Planning to kill a tender Valentine's Day moment?

TAURUS

APRIL 20-MAY 20

A sudden urge to take an art history course or a cruise through the Caribbean springs from the inspirational Aquarius new moon and the start of the Chinese New Year. As long as you're opening up to a culture that's exotic or unfamiliar, you'll feel you're making progress and enriching your life. Around this time, a financial matter that's been slow to show a profit or any satisfaction at all begins to make sense. If you can avoid getting into a grudge match, you might have a pleasure-filled Valentine's Day.

GEMINI

MAY 21-JUNE 20

Because Twins are able to think ahead and weigh alternatives better than most, the potentially good and bad situations that can develop from the seeds sown at the Aquarius new moon may appear as plain as the name recently placed on a dotted line. Keep in mind that a partnership or contractual matter could evolve into a major problem by Valentine's Day. You'll probably have to appease the beast you live or work with if you want to get away for the long Presidents Day weekend—or even enjoy the holiday at home.

CANCER

JUNE 21-JULY 22

Despite a busy work schedule and a full social life, you may be tempted to develop another meaningful relationship after the Chinese New Year. This lunar cycle highlights ways to capitalize on a joint venture, so on the attraction you have for someone who shares your values. Although the romantic implications are not yet obvious, who knows what'll happen once affectionate Venus enters your Capricorn marriage sign on the 4th. Be careful you're not courting danger on Valentine's Day. No extreme sports.

LEO

JULY 23-AUGUST 22

February is an excellent time for Leos to strut their stuff. Because your sun ruler contacts a wide variety of planets, your energy can bounce from spiritual pillar (when it merges with idealistic Neptune) to practical post (while it's being supported by sensible Saturn). In between you'll feel well-protected by generous Jupiter (and lucky, to boot) before daring to venture beyond the boundaries of convention on Valentine's Day. Expect changes as the sun meets unpredictable Uranus in Aquarius on the 17th.

VIRGO

AUGUST 23-SEPTEMBER 22

With so much hot-headed fire and air energy bouncing around, it may help to know that your Mercury ruler is still transiting reality-based Capricorn and that affectionate Venus is also in that friendly, down-to-earth sign. A measure of common sense and sensory pleasure should counteract the high-flying platitudes and fleeting desires that are motivating other signs. And while you might not be moved on a deep emotional level, come Valentine's Day weekend, you'll get enough sweet smiles and sugar to satisfy your cravings.

LIBRA

SEPTEMBER 23-OCTOBER 22

If nothing else, the Chinese New Year can inaugurate a series of feasts celebrating the joys of having friends from different walks of life. Even achieving a bit of domestic bliss is not such a far-fetched ideal this month, not as long as intelligent life surrounds your home. If you want to do something out of the ordinary, save it for Presidents Day weekend when you and a loved one might be in jeopardy. No matter how well you ski, heart-stopping, ultimately reckless behavior should be postponed for another time.

SCORPIO

OCTOBER 23-NOVEMBER 21

You seem to be putting plenty of pressure on yourself to make a big splash, so you don't need a parent's enthusiasm or a client's assistance. However, be aware that both of your ruling planets, macho Mars and powerful Pluto, are about to join forces in your Sagittarius house of assets and values. If there's something you're determined to grab for yourself, mid-February would be the best time to take it. That's when you're able to prove just how passionate you are about what you desire and how willing you are to take a risk.

SAGITTARIUS

NOVEMBER 22-DECEMBER 21

Fiery Mars in Sag provides a blast of energy and eagerness you can direct to a joint financial project or to your continuing search for answers to life's major philosophical questions: How? why? and why me? Because your protective Jupiter ruler is involved, the prospects for meeting specific goals look good. However, come Valentine's Day, when take-action Mars teams up with Pluto, ruler of the underworld and the collective unconscious, you could inadvertently sabotage what you set out to accomplish. Where is the love?

CAPRICORN

DECEMBER 22-JANUARY 20

Another rewarding week as the Aquarius sun supports your prudent Saturn ruler. Rarely does following tradition pay off the way it can now. If you're making plans for Valentine's Day and considering doing something unusual or original, fight the urge. When it comes to romance, tried and true is the way to go. Should you feel compelled to blaze a trail and make your mark, come up with an art work or a fashion trend you can cash in on instead. Few can resist the magnetic attraction of Venus when she's in Capricorn.

Improper Sightings

Unlike the rest of your friends, we want to see the photos from your next trip.

Where do you take us? Send us a picture of you or a friend, or better yet, someone famous reading THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN and tell us where you were. Since we want your feedback on the rest of the magazine, too, submissions that include a letter expressing your opinion will really get our attention.

Caroline Donnelly and Shane Richardson celebrated their nuptials on Trump Bay Beach in St. John's, Antigua. Since this picture was taken, Trump has subdivided the bay into a string of successful inlets and sold them off at an enormous profit.

Sarah Begley and David Wilkins (who, we add, won last fall's Halloween costume contest at Felt with their Sharon and Ozzy Osbourne getups) tied the knot in West Harwich last September. Ros McLean, Kate Bailey, Jenn Glanville, Alison Peters and Marleigh Brown helped them celebrate by drinking bubbly on the beach.

Bernard and Kathleen Theisen-Remaud said aloha to matrimony in Honolulu.

April and Wilson Rey were pronounced mon and wife in Negril, Jamaica. Their guests, Denise Rico and Elizabeth Harriman, thought the wedding was quite irie.

THE NEXT BEST THING TO A WEEK IN ST. BARTS...

There's no more civilized spot in all of Boston than the Venetian palazzo of the Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum, and there was no more civilized gathering than the crowd who turned out there one bone-rattlingly cold evening for a cocktail party to kick off the museum's centennial celebration.

The reception included the obligatory wine, cheese and hors d'oeuvres, as well as a sneak peek at the three-part installation by conceptual artist Joseph Kosuth that marks the anniversary.

In addition to Kosuth (an American who lives and works in Rome and is currently the Gardner's 41st artist-in-residence), the impressive guest list included the likes of curator Pieranna Cavalchini; the museum's stunning directrix, Anne Hawley; its first female board president, Barbara Hostetter, and her cable gazillionaire husband, Amos; Gardner descendant John "Jack" Gardner; Venezuelan painter Raphael Jaimes-Branger and his art collector brother, Ricardo; Beacon Hill social butterfly Meg Talon; arctic blond art dealer Anja Kola; bachelors-about-town Paul Nechipurenko and Andrew Reale; hair deity Mario Russo and his distinguished other half, Frank Gilligan; education czar Tom Payzant; broadcasting poobah Paul LaCamera of Channel 5; and others of that ilk.

Defying the Siberian sub-zero weather outside, guests gathered around the spectacular indoor courtyard, with its blooming orchids and whatnot, doing what one does at a cocktail party—namely, imbibing, ingesting and socializing.

"This is so lovely," said one woman, "I think I'll stay until spring. Think they'd mind if I called and had a mattress delivered?"

WARNING: FUN MAY BE HAZARDOUS TO FASHION FOOTWEAR...

"Wheeeeeeee!"

That (or some facsimile thereof) was the sound heard most often at the Anti-Defamation League's Young Leadership Celebration, held at the Institute of Contemporary Art.

The supremely chic evening—complete with passed trays of mojitos, a sushi buffet and dancing to a cavalcade of hits from the golden age of disco—attracted such social stalwarts as the evening's honorees, Back Bay fun couple and budding philanthropists Rachael and Andy Goldfarb, who received an award named after Judi and Douglas Krupp; the party's co-chairs, Erin and David Appel, Liza Cohen, Janie and Jeffrey Dretler, and Maggie Gold Seelig and her other half, Jonathan; such high-profile types as Wendy and Chip Pierce; event planner Joan Jolley; South African entrepreneur Michael Walt; ubiquitous gala-goers Randi and Joel Cutler; unfairly attractive couple Glynis and Matt Hobika; stunning blond divorcée Leigh Weatherly; Internet entrepreneur Jean Robert (one of the triplets whose family owns the legendary Maison-Robert restaurant); babe-a-licious Harvard Business School student Jennifer Wynn; the adorable Jessica Luterman; film actress and gadfly Nada Kane and her husband, Steve; fashion plate Beth Dickerson; environmental remediator and real estate scion Tedd Saunders; catering magnat Dan Mathieu; lovable art dealer Abbi Ross and her fiancé, bespectacled hipste Marc Goodman; Peruvian princess Emm Colina DaVibero; Oppenheimer fund fac totum Eduardo Torres; gorgeous blon interior designer Carolina Tress Bals baugh and her son, Eric; and bachelor about-town Ron Luccio, who bid $150 i the silent auction to be mentioned in thi column but who probably would hav been anyway. (Hey, Ronnie, it was for good cause).

The reason for all the childlike glee—aside from the fact that it was an off-the hook party—was the three-story slide in stalled by Belgian artist Carsten Holler which turned an otherwise sophisticate group of adults into rambunctious 3-year olds at a playground.

Needless to say, the see-through slide of fered some intimate glimpses, as skirt rode up on the ride down, and there were few people who were less than enchante by the momentary thrill.

"It ruined my shoes," complained on fashion plate. "I feel like asking whethe their insurance covers a pair of Jimm Choos." iB

SPACEY INVADER

I just finished reading the interview with Kevin Spacey (Soroff/On, Feb. 5), and I knew I liked him. He exhibited both class and courtesy to put up with Soroff's aimless and inappropriate badgering. Unless the Spaceys and Soroffs are natural enemies, I'm at a loss to understand the tone of Soroff's interview. I doubt celebrities line up for his interviews now, and I'd expect even fewer would in the future, given the way he treated Spacey.

I would expect that after reading this interview, your editor recognized the offense and sent Mr. Spacey a worthy gift basket in apology. If not—it's never too late.

LUNCH-DRUNK LOVE

I was amazed to note that LunchDates was excluded from the sidebar on suggested ways for Boston area singles to meet that accompanied your annual listing of Boston's bachelors and bachelorettes (Jan. 22 issue). As Boston's oldest dating service (started in 1982), we have provided a confidential, tasteful and fun way for thousands of down-to-earth, professional singles to meet one another, for lunch or an after-work coffee or drink in nice restaurants. Our track record speaks for itself, as LunchDates matches have generated thousands of successful relationships.

I was also amused that once again your magazine primarily featured media personalities and professional athletes as examples of Boston's finest singles. Having interviewed thousands of single Bostonians, I can assure you that this city contains some fantastic single engineers, teachers, nurses and businesspeople who are very bright, interesting and attractive, even though they don't go to work at Fenway Park!

OUAGADOUGOU IS THE CAPITAL OF BURKINA FASO!

I would like to thank you for the article listing pub trivia nights in Boston (The Word, Jan. 22). I run Primetime Trivia here in town, and I have been doing trivia gigs for more than three years and haven't heard much in the press about it. Since your article came out, the events have become bigger in the past week. Thank you for getting the trivia word out there.

FUR PAS

It's too bad Mopsy Strange Kennedy chose to feature Suphi Fur in her Feb. 5 column, "Think Mink." There is nothing glamorous about what happens to animals in order to make these coats. Ms. Kennedy mentioned that Suphi's fox coats are so luxurious it makes you want to wear one to accept your Oscar. In reality, celebrities and designers are increasingly refusing to wear fur. Designers Calvin Klein, Todd Oldham and Stella McCartney are just a few people who won't go near fur. Tell Mopsy to get with the times—fur is dead.

CONTRIBUTORS

PHILIP FRIEDMAN

Photographer Philip Friedman was born in Princeton, N.J., but was brought up in England, where he lived for 10 years before moving back to the United States with his family when he was 16. He went to college at the Mason Gross School of the Arts in New Brunswick, N.J., where he studied painting and photography. There, he studied under fashion photographer Sandi Fellman, who encouraged him to become a commercial photographer as well as a fine artist.

After a brief career as a fine artist, Friedman opened his studio in Gramercy Park in New York in 1996 and became a still-life and fashion photographer shortly thereafter. His work can be found in the pages of Glamour, Entertainment Weekly, the New York Times and, of course, the Improper Bostonian. He has photographed everyone from Michael C. Hall of Six Feet Under to Gisele Bündchen and Lil' Kim. To see more of Friedman's work, turn to this issue's men's fashion feature on page 27.

FROM THE EDITOR

BREAKING THE CODE

When it comes to going-out wear, one outfit's so ubiquitous among Boston women that it's been called a uniform. We know it well: black pants with a flirty top. Why not think beyond that convention? asks the Improper's fashion editor Samantha House.

"I encourage women to dress up when they go out to dinner or a club and not to feel self-conscious if they wear a dress to a cocktail party instead of what they wore to work," she says. "You should have one area of your closet for daytime clothes and one for nighttime wear."

If you've run into House at any after-5 event in this town (she'd be the tall redhead in the daring dress), you know she lives that advice.

Though House sees a growing interest overall among Bostonians in keeping up with fashion trends, the city's men may be a little more progressive than their female counterparts. "Men aren't playing it as safe as they used to," she says, adding that they can spruce up with simple changes. "Men can look hipper just by changing one thing—by wearing a brightly colored shirt or one with a funkier pattern."

In this our annual spring fashion issue, House shows you the coming season's trends. As is often the case when war looms and personal budgets are tight, the latest looks are classic rather than overly trendy, with an emphasis on suits for men, and dresses and skirts for women. That emphasis, combined with the coming thaw, makes spring the perfect time for the fairer sex to kick the trouser habit.

Finally, as evidence that Boston's gaining recognition on the fashion front, our work on this issue drew interest from music channel VH1. They filmed our spring shoe shoot and interviewed House and the models for the show Pop Illustrated. Look for that episode on VH1 in the spring.

I hope you'll find warmth and wardrobe inspiration in this issue. Maybe next time you're out on the town, you'll be the one breaking the dress code.

NEW IN TOWN

Tea for Two

It takes a truly special occasion to inspire us to venture outside city limits—especially on a snowy Sunday in February. But the idea of having "high tea" in Arlington had a cozy allure. With a few laments about having to brave the cold weather, we made the trek.

The Edwardian Tea Room on Mass. Ave. has been open since last summer, but somehow it's managed to stay under the radar until recently. We walked into a room with high ceilings, bronze sculptures, potted palms, Oriental rugs and 22-karat gold-leaf chairs upholstered with silk. Truly replicating an Edwardian-era tea room, everything from the china to the teapots is authentic, says owner Anthony Apicella. Tea—more than 50 different types from around the world—is poured at two-person tables scattered about. Along with the liquid comfort comes a three-tiered tray with tasty blueberry and raisin scones (served with clotted cream, of course); finger sandwiches of cream cheese, watercress, cucumbers and cheese; and tiny pastries. "There are the Starbucks-type tea places, and then there's the real thing," says Apicella. Customers agree. The waiting list for functions is six months long. 1332 Mass. Ave., Arlington (781-648-6508).—E.H. and J.S.

Kristin Slater (No. 18) leads the charge at the Passion Plunge

Slam Dunks

Ice, Ice, Baby... Boston Breakers Chrisy McCann and Kristin Slater (above) made diving headers into the frigorific waters at Nantasket Beach in Hull Feb. 8. The Breakers' participation in the annual Passion Plunge raised $3,000 for the Special Olympics—and probably helped them prepare for their first practice March 1.

Hoping for the Ichiro Effect... We mentioned a while back that the Celtics' Feb. 24 game against the Rockets might draw a larger-than-average crowd on the strength of Houston star Yao Ming. Well, the game's not yet sold out, but the C's have declared Feb. 24 the first-ever Asian-American Night at the FleetCenter, inviting fans to "come enjoy a culturally diverse evening of basketball." Ming's teammate, Bostjan Nachbar, is still waiting for an opposing team to declare Slovenian Night.

Branded... Sports marketing group Woolf Associates has created a brand identity for heavyweight champion John "the Quietman" Ruiz. When Ruiz fights Roy Jones Jr. in Las Vegas March 1, his new logo—his name over a sword inscribed with "the Quietman" on the blade—will be on display. If you're not sure what exactly a sword has to do with an unusually reserved boxer, Woolf chief creative officer Thomas S. Duane explains, "A complete identity goes beyond a simple logo. It incorporates all of the consumer touch points to ensure a uniform brand building experience." OK, OK. Could somebody get Mike Tyson to explain that to us?

New Jerseys... Last year Joe Thornton's No. 19 jersey was the top seller nationwide, according to hockey-gear gurus CCM. The Celtics aren't doing too shabby either, and since the start of the season Paul Pierce's No. 34 has been the hottest number both online and at the NBA store in New York. Now, if they could just get a few more people to come to the games....—Ezra Dyer

Rockin' at Roxy

•Following the recent kickoff of Latin Fridays at Roxy, Global Jet Set has decamped and relocated its weekly happening to Mantra. Reinvented as "Sugar," Friday nights at Mantra promise to combine the style and flair of New York and Miami with cutting-edge house music from top local, national and international DJs. Expect a well-dressed Ladder District crowd enjoying the plush setting complete with dancers, live percussion and visual projections.

•Just after a launch party at Roxy in January, classes at the DJ Mix Academy DJ training center are now in full swing. In Boston, London and even Sydney these days, music equipment retailers report that turntables are regularly outselling guitars 2-to-1. Perhaps you (or people you know) recently invested in a couple of turntables and a mixer but haven't yet mastered the DJ craft. Don't try to dispose of all that expensive gear on eBay just yet—get some tutoring. DJ Mix Academy provides a starting point for aspiring DJs. Founded by DJ Manolo and Peter Souhleris, the academy has assembled an all-star roster of local DJ talent to serve as faculty. See www.djmixacademy.com.

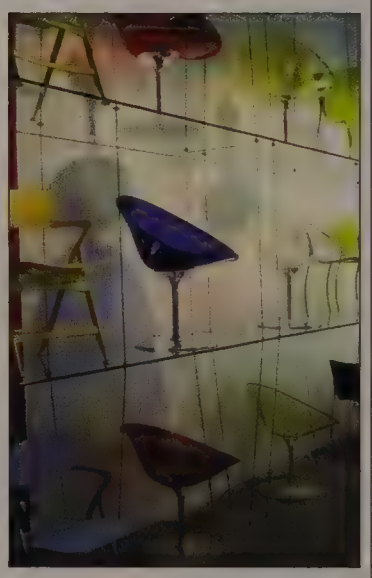
AROUND TOWN

Funky Furniture x 2

They're not far apart geographically, but two new Boston furniture stores are poles apart aesthetically.



There's nary a cushion in sight at the space-agey Kartell, which recently opened in the Back Bay. It offers a wealth of '60s-throwback, Jetsons-style tables and chairs, most made of brightly colored see-through plastic. Eep app ork ah-ah! 10 Saint James St., Boston (617-728-4442).

Meanwhile, plush is the name of the game at Biltmore Furniture in the South End, which opened in mid-February, selling custom-made sofas, love seats and chairs. You choose the fabric (from more than 3,000 options) and style, and they'll make it for you at an affordable price (from $1,500-$3,000 for a sofa). If you live in a tiny Beacon Hill apartment with narrow passageways, they'll even make a sofa with detachable arms and legs. 1313 Washington St., Boston (617-423-7632).—E.H. and J.S.

Beating Beauty Blues

After this harsh winter has taken its toll on your body and skin, there's no better way to emerge refreshed for spring than to relax, sip some wine and be pampered from head to toe. Staff members of Avanti Salon, Bella Sante Spa and the Newbury Center for Cosmetic Facial Plastic Surgery pool their resources on March 4 with an evening meant to help you beat the winter blues. Whether you need a deep conditioning treatment, a revitalizing facial or even a shot of botox, there'll be someone to cater to your every whim. Bring a group of friends and enjoy complimentary refreshments at Avanti Salon March 4 at 7pm. 11 Newbury St., Boston. Call 617-375-0500 for an appointment.—Samantha Ho

TIDBITS & MORSELS

Express Yourself

In the Doghouse... The menu at a new bakery in the South End sounds positively mouthwatering—if you're a canine, that is. There are carob-dipped peanut-butter bones, carob-chip puppy dough, Treatza pizza, liver's lane and polka poodle power barks. Polka Dog Bakery, a boutique for dogs, opened in early February. Owners Robert Van Sickle and Deborah Gregg bake their all-natural goodies on site from scratch, with no added sugar, salt or preservatives. Sounds like a ruff life. 256 Shawmut Ave., Boston (617-338-5155).

Pita Please... Falafel-addicted Cambridge residents were dismayed to learn that their favorite Middle Eastern eatery, Falafel Place, had lost its lease last fall. The good news is that it has resurfaced on the outskirts of Kenmore Square. Self-described "falafel-tologist" and chef Ahmad Kawash makes his falafel from scratch with fresh cilantro. "Everybody says they sell the best falafel," says Kawash, "but we really do." 512 Park Drive, Boston (617-266-8120).

A New Mantra... Dinner for one at Mantra, the gourmet Indian/French fusion restaurant in the Ladder District, will set you back between $40 and $60. So the restaurant's new express lunch menu's price tag caught our eye—a mere $12. How can it be? Thomas John's award-winning cuisine for such a bargain? You get soup or salad and a choice of light entrees like tandoor-roasted chicken or grilled salmon. At a guaranteed 45 minutes from the time you order until you're out the door, it's one of the quickest (and tastiest) bargains around. 52 Temple Place, Boston (617-542-8111). Mon.-Fri., 11:30am-2:30pm.

Eat, Drink and Be Merry... When it comes to invigorating activities, belting out tunes in a bar runs a close second to singing in the shower. Here's an opportunity to do it with professionals (at a bar, that is, not in the shower). Join the Revels performing arts company for the first Revels Pub Sing of the season at Doyle's Café Feb. 25. If you don't know the words to 18th- to late 19th-century drinking songs like "Fathom the Bowl" and "Jones' Ale," the Revels will provide you with a pocket songbook with all the lyrics. 3484 Washington St., Jamaica Plain (617-972-8300, ext. 29). 6pm. $10.

Bohemian Rhapsody... Back in days when intellectuals appreciated a bohemian aesthetic (think Funny Face), many profound thoughts were formed over drinks in a dim bar. A new science discussion group, Cafe Scientifique, has picked up the idea, hosting get-togethers that mix cocktails with contemplation at Redline bar in Cambridge. The Feb. 24 talk will focus on the Columbia space shuttle. The group (which we envision as made up of black-clad, bespectacled intellectuals who speak at least three languages) is open to one and all, but we recommend you offer up a few more Q's than A's if you aren't sure what you're talking about. 59 JFK St., Cambridge (617-491-9851).

Tequila Sunset... The masterminds behind Allston late-night mainstays Sunset Grill & Tap, Big City and Redneck's Roast Beef just opened another watering hole on Comm. Ave. Brookline's new Sunset Cantina continues in the style of its sister establishments, with a little more chutzpah: a full liquor license. Diners can choose from no less than 150 menu items along with 50 draft beers, another 50 microbrews and more than 40 tequilas. 916 Comm. Ave. Brookline. (617-731-TOGO).

IMPROPER REPORTS

Baby, It's Bitter Outside

Who can forget January's 30 days of temperatures that never rose above freezing? Trudging to the T in subzero temperatures had many of us chilled to the bone, but the weather had just as much of an impact on many local businesses.

•Frog Pond: "We've seen a huge decrease in skaters," says director of external affairs Mary Hines. "After a half hour on the ice, it's no good for people. We always have a few diehards out there who lov having the ice to themselves, though."

•Brookline Ice and Coal: "People are not putting as much ice in their drinks," says one employee. But the company has seen an unusual request: "People are buying 25-pound blocks of ice and sledding down hills. I have no idea how—or if—they sit on them," she adds.

•Ambassador Brattle and Yellow Cab: "There have been a lot more calls for short jobs like three blocks or so, which makes it hard to keep up with service," says controller George Fiorenza. "If it keeps going like this, my guys are going to be working 24 hours a day."

•Steve's Ice Cream: "It's definitely taken a toll on business," says manager Carol Troxel. "The diehards keep us going, though."

•Massachusetts Bay Lines: "Our commuter line that goes from Boston to Hingham has slowed down because ice keeps getting stuc in the engine," says director of marketing Shane Lemay. "We've had problems with the propellers, which can chip or bend from ice."

Cactus Club: "We've sold just as many margaritas," says Joe Sousa, director of operations,"but we've sold more on the rocks than frozen."

Dining In: "Our volume of orders has absolutely been higher," says marketing manager Greg Trombley. "Nobody wants to go outside."

Newbury Tan: "It's slow," says manager Allen Archibald III. "Tanning is a luxury. If the weather's bad, people aren't going to come out."

Will Jacques performer Diamond Dunhill need to find a new venue?

Shock Jacques... In one corner is the Bay Village Neighborhood Association, champion of pristine streets. In the other is Jacques cabaret, longtime playground for transvestites, rockers and all things alternative. They're now facing off: The BVNA wants the Boston Licensing Board to revoke Jacques' liquor license, thus doing away with the "undesirable" clientele it claims loiter on the streets. The feud came to a head at the board hearing Feb. 4, when Jacques manager (and former member of the BVNA) Donald Richard defended his club, saying that any prostitution near his establishment is a policing problem. If you've got something to say about the dispute, the record remains open until March 3, and the commissioner is slated to render a decision March 6.

Boston Unplugged... Hard-core Friday-night partygoers weren't the only ones experiencing blackouts in the wee hours of Feb. 8. Several business in the Boston Common area were forced to either shut down or completely shuffle their schedules to accommodate a massive power outage, which left the Sports Club/LA, the Wang Center, Loews Boston Common, the Frog Pond and the Ritz-Carlton Boston Common all in the dark. Among the most inconvenienced were the 175 attendees of Blu's Super Hunger Brunch, who were forced to take their appetites elsewhere, and guests of the Ritz, who trekked across the park to the sister suites on Arlington Street. Tony Pangaro, principal at the Millennium Partners Boston, attributes the outage to a blown NStar transformer.

Cuddle Up with Charles... Looks like Cupid's arrow was right on target on Beacon Hill. The Charles Street Inn was dually noted as one of the top-10 most romantic inns of the year in both the Feb. 7 edition of USA Today and by American Historic Inns. The Inn's rep says, "We were booked solid before the article came out, and the phone has been ringing constantly since." (617-371-0008).

A room at the Charles Street Inn.

Forever Young...If your face is in need of a little pick-me-up and you don't want go the Michael Jackson route, Mass Eye and Ear Infirmary has a solution that's short and sweet. Jokingly referred to as "lunchtime facelifts," their mini-facelifts take between 15 and 30 minutes to perform. The specifics of the procedures are discussed over hors d'oeuvres at Davio's March 3 at 5:30pm.

Creatures of the Night...Good news for late-night revelers: On Feb. 11, the MBTA Advisory Board voted to keep the Night Owl bus service up and running. The late-night service, which began in September 2001, was at risk because of budget issues. Nightclubs in particular were up in arms—Avalon even circulated a petition to save the service and organized a protest on the day of the vote. Much to their (and our) relief, the committee voted to keep Night Owl going. "The safety of our citizens and the hospitality of our city has been maintained," says Paul Regan, executive director of the MBT Advisory Board. Perhaps we have a shot at attaining that elusive "world-class city" status after all...if partying until 2:30am counts.

Can adolescence be extended till the old folks' home?

On the way up to a recent ski trip to Canada with a bunch of male friends, Scott, Clay and I passed an exit sign or Bone Road. This prompted the question, If you lived on Bone Road, what would you call your house? The Bone Shack? Bone Manor? Home Sweet Bone? Over the next several miles, this sign provided almost as much entertainment as the exit for Scotrun, Pa., does on a trip west. A little while later, my overtired brain cranked out an unpleasant thought. "At what point will we stop thinking that the word 'bone' is funny?" I asked. "Never," Clay responded.

The evidence of the next four days with the guys would support that conclusion. Our primary sources of amusement were not what you'd call high-concept humor: folding Scott up into the sleep sofa. Letting trouser coughs fly in the gondola. Wilson asking a waitress, "Have you ever been to Subway?" after which he planned to sing a song that Clay has come to detest, "Clay Henry, Clay Henry, he's a fireman and a shared fan, Clay Henry. Got real big on burgers and fries, now he's down to a smaller size." (She adeptly shot him down by claiming that she'd never been to Subway.)

Of course, juvenile behavior is certainly exacerbated by an absence of women, and the estrogen-free nature of this trip probably contributed to the simian level of social interaction. By my reckoning, girls begin to surpass boys in maturity at roughly age 3, and boys never catch up. But the presence of females does tend to elevate the overall maturity level, because, whether they admit it or not, guys care what girls think of them. Had there been any women with us, for instance, I'm sure our grocery list might've included something other than beer, Tostitos, salsa, mac 'n' cheese, Entenmann's breakfast pastries and the kind of juice beverage whose label says "Contains no actual juice." Were there women around, we would've made sure we also picked up some carrot sticks or seven-grain bread or rice cakes. You know, responsible food.

Even on our own, however, there was evidence to contradict Clay's assertion that we will maintain our current lifestyles—call it "Billy Madison without the money"—until we're old and wizened. One day Doyle and I quit skiing at about 2pm so that we could devote more time to understanding Canadian culture by drinking Kokanees and watching snowmobile races on TV at a bar. We also ordered buffalo wings, the Canadian interpretation of which turned out to be emaciated little chicken bones slathered in K.C. Masterpiece barbecue sauce. After this savory fare, I was attempting to dislodge a stubborn chunk of poultry from my teeth with my fingernail (remember, again, that there were no women around) when Doyle began expounding upon the virtues of dental floss.

I'm a fan of dental floss myself, but Doyle, little did I know, is a floss fanatic. At his last teeth-cleaning, his dentist scared him by making him watch a video about gum disease that sounded more grotesque than any driver's-ed highway carnage film yet produced. He went on to tell me how, if you don't floss, "pockets" form in your gums, those pockets harbor bacteria, and then your teeth fall out and you end up living in a bell tower and saying "yeesss master" a lot. By the time he was done talking, the piece of chicken in my teeth may as well have been a wad of anthrax spores, and I was ready to jump over the bar and begin frantically flossing with the bartender's ponytail.

> GIRLS BEGIN TO SURPASS BOYS IN MATURITY AT ROUGHLY AGE 3, AND BOYS NEVER CATCH UP.

What was even scarier than gum disease, though, was that we were sitting in a bar on vacation talking about gum disease. When did this become an issue? Shouldn't we have been talking about who threw the sickest switch rodeo five tail-grab in the X Games? Or how wasted we were last night, dude? Or how many surfboards we fit inside a Honda Element while on our way to the bonfire to listen to techno music and vote for Democrats?

I suppose it doesn't always follow that as life's responsibilities mount, one's sense of humor changes, but I hope that as conversations turn to rising tuition costs and mortgage rates, colonoscopies and cholesterol levels, there'll still be a place for putting on a mullet wig and a Dicken's Cider T-shirt and folding someone up into the couch. I've got to set a good example for my kids. iB

Thalassa Ali

BY JONATHAN SOROFF

Novelist and Sufi mystic Thalassa Ali was born in Boston, the daughter of eminent archaeologist Hugh O'Neill Hencken and Thalassa Crusoe, the British television personality who hosted PBS's long-running horticultural program Making Things Grow. After graduating from Radcliffe, Ali married a businessman from Pakistan and moved to that country, where she spent 12 years, the last three as a widow with two children carrying on her husband's business. After returning to Boston in the late '70s, she spent 15 years working as a stockbroker. Raised as an Episcopalian, she converted to Islam nine years after her return to the U.S., when, on a visit to Pakistan, she met the leader of the Tauhidia mystic brotherhood. After retiring from the investment world, she began work on her first novel, the beginning of a proposed trilogy set in the region of 19th-century India that is now Pakistan. Entitled A Singular Hostage, it was published in November by Bantam. She lives in the Back Bay.

Jonathan Soroff: Best thing about pushing a book?

Thalassa Ali: Connecting with people you haven't seen in years, who suddenly treat you as if you've done something important.

JS: Worst part?

TA: The exhaustion. If you really try to do everything you're supposed to do, you'll end up with pneumonia, which is what I'm just getting over.

JS: Favorite aspect of writing?

TA: Disappearing into the story and not having to deal with what's going on around me—my bills, real life.

JS: Most gratifying thing about seeing your name in print?

TA: I don't know that I feel gratified by that. But I guess the best thing is that my mother wrote many books, and since we share the same first name, hers is also on my book.

JS: Do you have your mother's green thumb?

TA: In a way, except that every single thing on my porch just died while I had pneumonia.

JS: How about your father's interest in the past—did you inherit that from him?

TA: Both my parents were tremendously interested in the past. In fact, my mother was originally an archaeologist too, specializing in 19th-century England, and I honestly didn't think there was another moment in history that was less interesting. Yet my book involves that period.

JS: Your heroine seems a lot like your mother: a bit of a renegade from the British upper class…

TA: Well, the two ladies Eden in the book are both a lot like my grandmother, and I would say that my heroine is a combination of my mother and my daughter.

JS: You were a single parent, which is hard enough, but you did it for a while in a foreign country. Hardest thing about that?

TA: I was in my early 30s, and I found it a tense business just, for instance, going out to a party, because people would want to know how I was going to get home. Not that people were gossiping about me, so much, but everybody wanted to know. For somebody who's an introvert from Boston, I found that a bit tough. On the other hand, people just surrounded me and protected me from my pain. I really didn't know people liked me until my husband died. When you're married to someone as charismatic and exciting as he was, how could you know if they invited you for yourself or because of him?

JS: Westerners think of countries like Pakistan as being extremely sexist, even misogynistic. How did it compare to working in the boys' club of Wall Street?

TA: Well, the people in Pakistan always showed me respect. I never had someone try to corner me in the lunch room, or the elevator, which is what happened when I was a broker. I had to fight for every bit of respect there.

JS: As a devout Muslim, the one thing you'd like all non-Muslims to understand?

TA: The generality of people in this country don't really get that the God to whom Muslims pray is the same God to whom they pray. And our prophets are the same prophets, from Adam (God bless him) to David to Jonah, to Jesus… The prophet Mohammed—upon whom be peace—is descended from the prophet Ismael, who was the first son of Abraham. So the conflict in Israel is brother killing brother, not only because they're all Semites, but because the religions are first cousins.

JS: What does the term jihad mean?

TA: Well, it's divided into two meanings, both of which involve the idea of struggle. The lesser jihad is against those who oppose you because you are a Muslim. The greater jihad is your inner struggle against your own tendency to do the wrong thing.

JS: So it's the lesser jihad that's been misinterpreted by Muslim fanatics?

TA: Correct.

JS: Hardest part of practicing Islam in Boston?

TA: Islam is a sort of tribal, communal thing, so I guess it's a bit isolated. Muslims refer to God throughout their conversations. They never talk about sex. In this country, people talk about sex in an elevator full of total strangers, but if they talk about God, they kind of cover their mouths.

JS: What does being a Sufi mean?

TA: It's the mystical dimension of Islam, and to me, it means that I live in two places: Here, and what I call the country of the heart. In this part of the world, we tend to operate from the head. In the East, particularly if you follow a mystical path, you operate from the heart. It's a very different way of viewing the world.

JS: How about psychic phenomena? Are you a believer?

TA: Oh, yes. It's so simple, and anybody who follows that kind of path will be able to read people's thoughts within a few years.

JS: So what am I thinking right now?

TA: It's not quite like that. If I thought about it, I could probably work out the issue in your life that was most painful to you, but it's not my business, so I'm not going to.

JS: It seems like your book has been positioned in this country as a bodice-ripper.

TA: No, you might think that, because of the cover, but if they were marketing it that way, they wouldn't have put it on NPR and The New Yorker. It would have been in TV Guide and the tabloids.

JS: Where are drivers worse: Karachi or Boston?

TA: Karachi, no question, because the sp cialty of Pakistanis is missing you b barely an inch. I remember driving som where with my Sufi teacher and absolute screaming several times. He was the wor driver I have ever met in my entire life. H also used to put his shoes on the wrong fee
Being a Sufi doesn't necessarily make yo

JS: Name three things that Lahore has that Boston doesn't.

spring FASHION WOMEN

After a treacherous winter of cold days and even colder nights I'm overjoyed to be sending you the spring fashion issue. Thoughts of cute sundresses and warmer days have been dancing in my head for months now, and this issue is the result. The new season offers the most innovative looks and feminine clothing choices available in a decade. I encourage you to shove all your scarves, gloves and bulky clothes into a storage unit and swear off anything resembling knit for at least six months, just as I intend to do.

This season's two main styles are classy sex appeal and flirty fun. In the sexy department, we have micro miniskirts and hot pants so short that they almost look like fancy knickers. Also look for plunging necklines, a lot of draping (get out the double-sided tape) and head-to-toe sheer. Fabrics run the gamut from gold lamé to denim to lace. Think high glamour when you head out for the evening and load on the accessories; nothing is too bold.

Flirty fun is all about looking pure. For a short dress, opt for simple white with a pleated skirt that swirls when you spin. Many designers are pushing the fifties dress, which, with its tight bodice and an explosion of pleats at the hips, looks more like a prom gown than a sundress. For lazy Sunday afternoons, fitted cotton dresses are making a comeback (perfect for an outdoor brunch). Don't forget a casual blazer to drape over your shoulders in case a cool breeze comes in.

For a few more spring tips, I asked famed designer Donna Karan about her take on this season and what she can't live without:

Samantha House: What are women looking for this spring?
Donna Karan: I think that women are craving happiness in their spring wardrobes and want clothes that are uplifting. Both my DKNY and Donna Karan New York collections had polka dots for that reason.
SH: How would you describe 2003 spring fashion?
DK: Flirty, fun and glamorous.
SH: What's the hottest trend we'll be seeing this spring for women?
DK: Short shorts and feminine print dresses
SH: What would you consider to be the staple that every woman must have in her wardrobe?
DK: Cashmere.
SH: What's your favorite item of clothing in your closet?
DK: My kimono—I literally took it right off the runway.
SH: What look do you think best suits Bostonian women?
DK: My spring collection was titled To Suit a Woman. I think that suits are essential to a woman's wardrobe in both Boston and New York.

So, no matter what this spring, look for fabrics that make you feel good and help you forget about winter. iB

spring FASHION MEN

In years past, Bostonian men have been known for their conservative style of dress. In fact, it's not an exaggeration to say that the majority of Boston men have pretty much stuck to dark pleated pants and white collared shirts. But more and more, the same men seem to be changing their ways. Looking around the streets of the Financial District, you'll now find bold colors mixed with different textures, all signs of men having more fun with their wardrobes. It won't be too long before men are swarming designer stores just as women flock to shoe sales. Lucky for men, there's a new crop of local designers catering to them. Among them, Wassim Kabarra, who designs men's dress shirts and manufactures them in Italy out of the finest fabrics. Set to launch his new collection at Taste boutique on Newbury Street this March, Kabarra gives Boston men some tips on how to stay up-to-date.

Samantha House: What are the trends for men this spring?

Wassim Kabarra: I love striped button-down shirts in candy colors; linen suits; and pastel colors.

WK: My Hermes ties.

SH: What are your favorite stores in Boston?

WK: Hermes, because the quality is unsurpassed. Taste has some great Swedish designers, and Louis has a very good mixture of up-and-coming designers. Brooks Brothers is a great staple place for classic, inexpensive designs.

SH: Give Boston men the one piece of fashion advice they can't live without.

WK: Clothes are an extension of your personality. They should make you look good and make you feel good about yourself. You can do that in a three-piece designer suit or in khakis and loafers. IB

Mopsy

Serendipitous shopping: Our unfettered correspondent seeks out the salubrious and the cerebral.

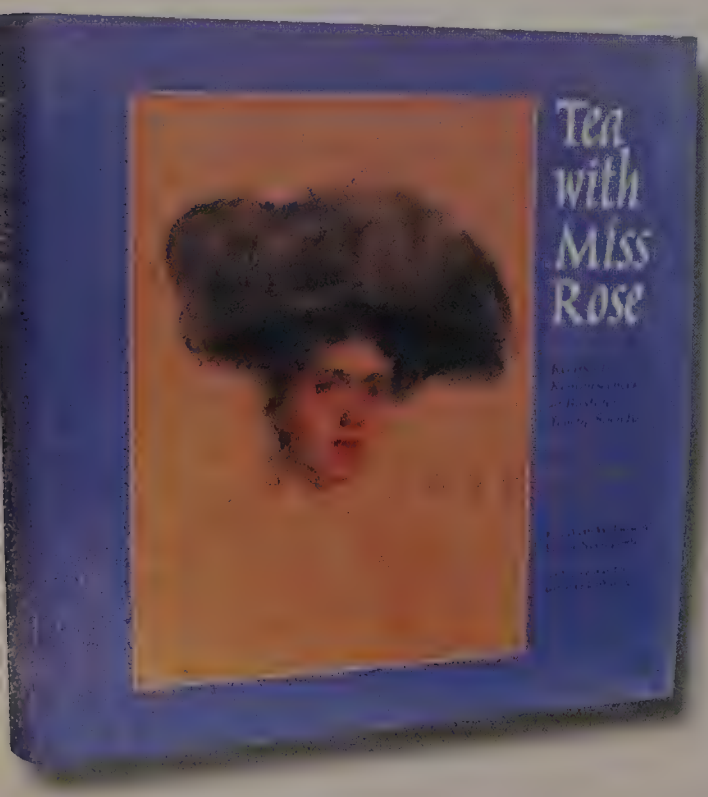
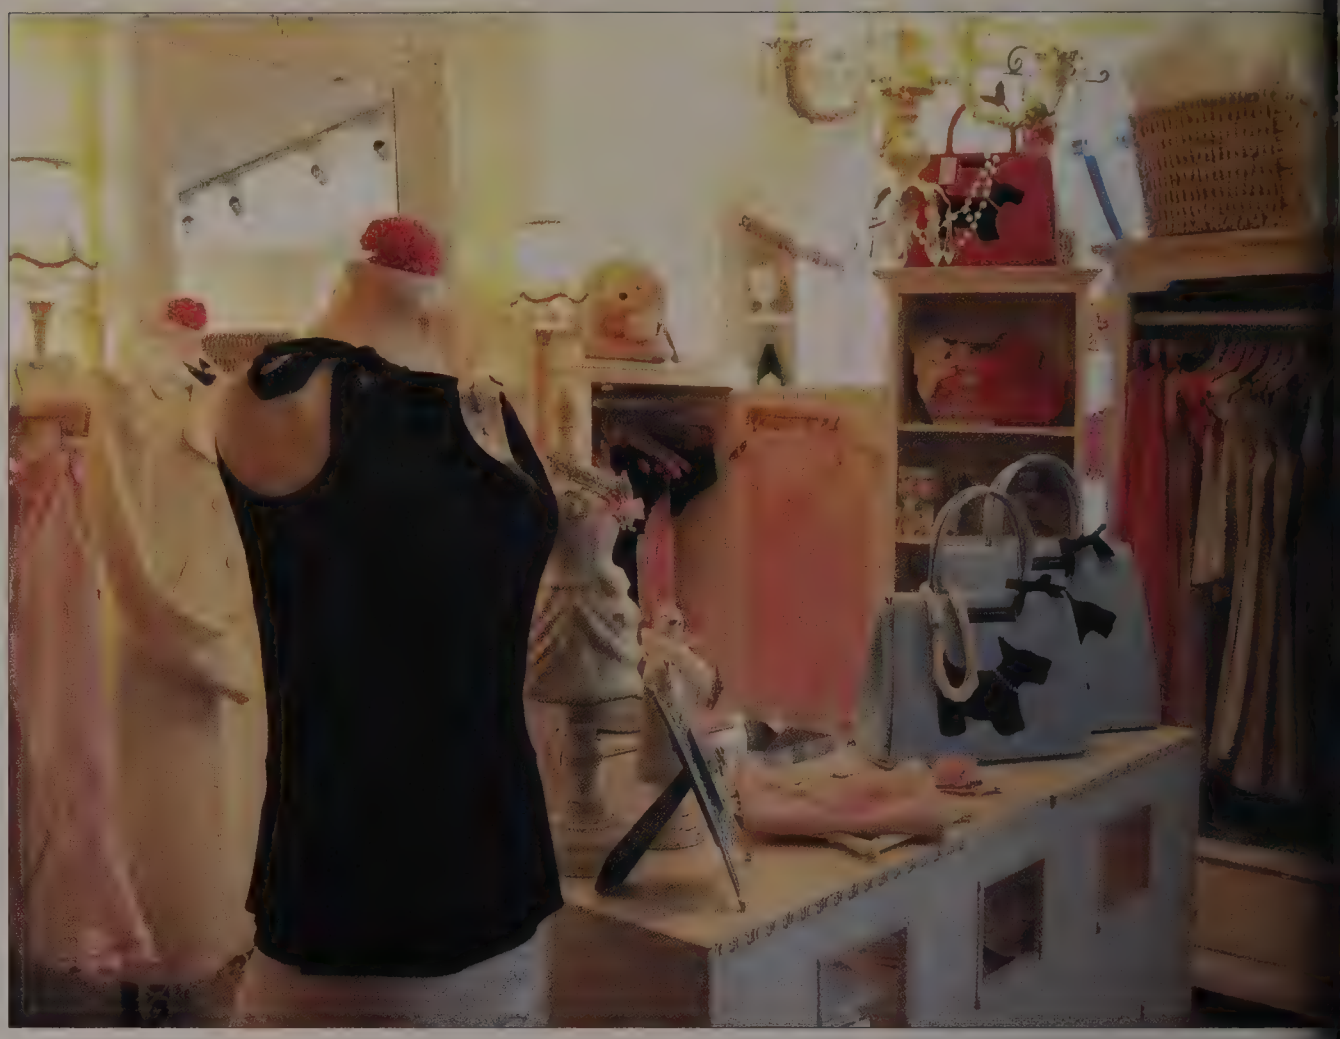
IN THIS CASE: PROPER BOSTONIANS

Tea with Miss Rose: Recipes and Reminiscences of Boston's Teacup Society, by Elizabeth Driscoll and Elaine Negroponte, paints a picture of Beacon Hill in the early 20th century and includes delicious fancy recipes for your own tea party. To order a copy, call 617-227-6993 or go to Amazon.com.

Back when people congregated on velvet sofas, both for social causes and mere socializing, there were salons and tea parties. Rose Standish Nichols, who had a touch of Katharine Hepburn's bold acerbic class, lived at 55 Mount Vernon Street, where she held lively, even intimidating teas—practically seminars—up through mid-20th century. She liked to mix improbably opposite guests, hoping sparks would fly. Born in 1872, Nichols was the first female landscape architect in America and lived almost half her life in Europe, befriending such cultural luminaries as art critic Bernard Berenson and the sculptor Saint-Gaudens. Founder of the Beacon Hill Reading Club in 1890, Nichols, along with other activist members of the "teacup society," involved herself in noble causes like world peace. In a slightly mischievous, arch tone, the book—which comes with a ribbon bookmark and gold Chinese tea paper end papers for added Beacon Hill flavor—specifies the terms of an haute tea party: You need an eight-foot table, a rented tea urn and muslin tea bags. Wonderfully refined recipes include Bell Ringers Eggnog, Lace Cookies, and Nut and Fruit Sandwiches. To follow Nichols' tea party format, we suggest you propose some vast, crackling discussion topic like, "What is your idea of heaven?"





SWEET BOUTIQUE

Holiday sells festive, pretty clothes and will photograph baby dresses and other memorable garments. At 127 Charles St., Boston, or call 617-973-9730.

Suggesting merriment in the wardrobe, this cute little shop has an air of Paris about it. Owner Jessika Pavlic, a former stylist, loves pretty clothes and pastel colors that bring festivity to special occasions as well as ordinary ones that need some spice. One simple, loosely woven cotton dress, with hemline frou-frous, recalls a Degas ballerina. Bella Bloomers from the designer Rebe—in pink and blue, and adorned with decoration at the bottom—are stylish, cottony and comfortable for yoga or just hanging. The "ta-da" feature of Rebe's elegant, body-hugging bateau-necked black dress is an enormous soft ribbon in pink, blue or red that dances off the side or the back, wherever you tie it. She also makes purses patched together from vintage fabrics. Another purse in the shop, stiffly at-attention in cheerful pink fleece, sports a chipper black Scottie. A simple top for everyday wear is given a party feel with crisscrossing ribbons and doily fabric. Holiday's staff photographer can create a framed photo of your baby's special-occasion dress to hold that precious, fleeting moment. The store's decor, which includes Venetian glass-mirrored picture frames and a veritable ballgown of a pink-gold silk curtain that covers the entrance to the changing room, adds Holiday flavor.

BEAT KEEPER

Rhythm Connections uses drumming to help people with attention deficit hyperactivity disorder and other learning problems. Contact Jonathan Shulman of Rhythm Connections at 508-877-9282, or go to www.rhythmconnections.com.

Teacher and drummer Jonathan Shulman recognizes the therapeutic value in the throbbing of the drum. If ADHD sufferers are all over the place, they're also "all over the time," he says. Through "rhythmic entrainment," drumming can help bring into focus the discipline—and the fun—of the moment. Always studiously avoiding student crisis mode, Shulman's multisensory approach takes the person through simple stepping, clapping and paddle-drum exercises, incorporating personalized phrases (say, about a teacher: "Mr. Gerard, not so hard"), until the student mirrors Shulman and rests comfortably in the otherwise-elusive groove. From there, he moves to the West African drum, encouraging the student to really feel and connect with the beat. Drumming is the medium that allows the student to internalize the soothing, grounding patterns. His key goal is helping students recover from mistakes with a feeling of safety. Whatever drumming skills emerge are transferable and fun, but Shulman, with his engaging style, mainly aims to help kids with speech-processing or attention difficulties feel competent. He also works with the elderly with astonishing rapport; forgotten song lyrics shake out like butterflies from a dusty box.

Banking on Italian

Chef Carmen Quagliata has made the Vault one of downtown's most appetizing dinner options

BY J. CHARLES MOKRISKI • PHOTOGRAPHS BY BERTA A. DANIELS

When the Vault opened almost six years ago in the Financial District, it substantially enhanced the dining options in that neighborhood. Eventually, original chef Rebecca Esty parted company with the owners, and the quality of the restaurant's food declined from its promising beginnings. Then, early last year, new owner Brian O'Neill, owner of Centro and the Good Life, brought in talented Centro chef Rene Michelena, who embarked on a Marco Polo–inspired path of fusion cuisine that combined elements of Asian and Italian cookery. But after only a few months, Michelena departed the Vault. He was replaced temporarily by Brian Maxwell, Michelena's sous chef, who reinvented the Vault as a traditional chophouse with a rustic Italian flair.

I enjoyed two excellent dinners at the Vault under Maxwell's regime and concluded that the new format was a winner. But then, inexplicably, the Vault once again changed its menu to modern American cuisine. Fortunately that detour was relatively short-lived, and late last year a new chef and co-owner, Carmen Quagliata, relocated to Boston from a heralded Napa Valley restaurant and reinstituted an Italian culinary motif. Quagliata, assisted by the talented Maxwell, has put the Vault back on track and made it one of downtown's most appetizing dinner options.

The opening salvo of our recent dinners was the amuse gueule that arrived immediately after we ordered. On one evening, it was a rillette of poached salmon with aioli, dotted with minced chives, served on tiny, crispy house-made crostini. On another night, salt-cured anchovy with celery, parsley and olive oil replaced the salmon. Both of those free tidbits provided a hint of the delicious food that was to come. Of the appetizers, we were refreshed by a salad of Boston Bibb lettuce and cara cara oranges ($9) with mustard and onion confit vinaigrette and shaved Manchego cheese. Buttery-textured lettuce and thin slices of juicy orange contributed to a marvelous medley of tastes and textures, including the savory mustard; sweet, tangy orange; creamy, sharp sheep's cheese; and aromatic ground black pepper. An appetizer called cured meats ($10) was far more enticing than its off-putting name. It consisted of luscious, satiny-textured Parma prosciutto, well-marbled duck prosciutto, first-rate house-cured beef bresaola, mild Tuscan salami and robust Calabrian salami with a strong fennel flavor. These thin slices of delicatessen delicacies radiated from a hub of mildly pickled vegetables that included cauliflower, green beans, onions, sliced carrots, fennel and two kinds of olives, with the exquisite, unannounced dividend of two heavenly morsels of Parmigiano Reggiano cheese.

Thankfully, Quagliata has restored a number of pasta dishes to the Vault's menu. Whole-wheat pappardelle with tomato, toasted walnuts, rosemary and Pecorino Romano cheese ($16) was spectacular. The wide, flat noodles were almost silky in texture, a felicitous contrast with the crunch of the walnuts. Warm Mediterranean flavors, dominated by rosemary and the rustic sharpness of salty sheep's cheese, made this a memorable dish.

Although the menu offers only six main courses, there was ample choice to satisfy different tastes and palates, ranging from seafood to poultry to beef. The caramelized scallops ($29) featured eight scallops, between sea and Cape in size, each topped with a delicious purée of chickpeas, diced tomatoes and oranges. The chef's Sicilian heritage was reflected in his skillful use of tomatoes and oranges, often together. Another example was the fennel-spiced roasted quail ($25). These two small but plump, crisp-skinned birds were exquisitely sauced with a reduction of the cooking juices combined with blood orange. The accompanying fennel, an aromatic vegetable if not reined in can be obtrusive and overwhelming, was here rendered mild and most mellow, by careful cooking as a gratinata of Parmesan cheese with its salty sweetness.

No restaurant could survive down without a good steak on the menu, and Vault did not disappoint on this front a sirloin steak ($29) served with sea-s crispy potatoes wilted spinach. thick, juicy cut, seared on the ou yet rare and within, was gua teed to satisfy the unabashed carni The potatoes, an i inative cross bet french fries and h restaurant is divided into two distinct spaces. A long copper bar dominates the area to the right of the entrance, which includes a row of comfortable booths upholstered in green leather. To the left of the entrance is an attractive, high-ceilinged room with gold and blue swirled wallpaper above the wainscoting and wood paneling below. A strategically placed divider used for storing wine helps break up the space into pleasant enclaves. Two huge gilt-framed mirrors dominate one wall.

The Vault in its recent incarnations has striven to find a formula by which it can satisfy its downtown business clientele with well-executed steaks while displaying a flair that can attract diners who might otherwise be tempted to stroll to the North End. With the arrival Quagliata and his fine Italian-accented cuisine, it appears to have found the key to success. IB

Spin's Real Sparkle

A sumptuous spread and a spontaneous spirit... BY CAROLYN FAYE FOX

Paul Overgaag, former chef/owner of Giannino's, will open The Red Room next to the House of Blues in April.

So, is the glass half empty or half full? In the case of this year's Spinazzola Gala Festival of Food and Wine, the signature wineglass was figuratively overflowing with generosity, both planned and spontaneous.

As usual, the annual gala raised a bundle—more than $600,000—earmarked to fight hunger via grants to hunger relief agencies, programs for the homeless, culinary apprenticeships and scholarships.

In addition, the Spinazzola Foundation stepped up to the plate in fast-food time, mere days after the party, to grant an emergency $10,000 to the New England Shelter for Homeless Veterans to help fend off a closing threatened by an enormous overdue utility bill. So the lights are on, and thanks to the good guys, we all feel a little warmer inside.

Does it really matter, then, that by 8:30pm at the gala, Veuve Clicquot had run out of champagne, and the Clio crew were hesitant to prepare any more fish tacos, since they'd exhausted their 20-gallon supply of freshly squeezed kalamansi lime juice? Not a bit. The Clio guys were easily persuaded to fix the tacos without the citrus, and they were delicious. More than 80 other wineries were on hand, and the sparkle of Spin isn't only to be found on evening gowns or in a champagne flute.

There was the devilish twinkle in chef Robert Fathman's baby blues as he dared us to look up his kilt (OK, we'd asked what he was wearing under it). "I never wear underwear. Never!" he insisted as he brandished a plastic pitchfork. Behind him, the Azure crew, attired in playful satanic horns and tails, served up "demonic infusions" of bourbon flavored with cinnamon and figs.

And there was the camaraderie, commiseration and community support offered to Robert Perry, one of the owners of the Elephant Walk and Carambola restaurants, whose Boston Elephant Walk location had been heavily damaged by fire two days earlier. Raymond Ost of Sandrine's offered to provide any needed assistance as Perry embarks on the complicated process of rebuilding. David Waters of Community Servings shared his experience with insurance adjusters way back when he worked at UpStairs at the Pudding, which also had suffered a fire. Perry, who had the fortitude and humor to festoon the Elephant Walk's table with yellow "fire line" tape from the scene of the blaze, hopes to reopen the Boston restaurant by late spring.

SECOND COURSE

Although many Charles Square–area condo dwellers are mourning the loss of Giannino's (Legal Sea Foods is taking over the spot Giannino's vacated in the courtyard of the Charles Hotel), loyal followers of chef/owner Paul Overgaag will not be long deprived of his cooking. Even much of the Giannino's staff will be on hand when Overgaag opens The Red House sometime in April. Next to the House of Blues (will someone please open a Yellow Bistro nearby to complete the set of Restaurants of Primary Color?), the Red House—with a menu that's more broadly European-influenced than its Northern Italian predecessor—will continue to feature the popular Giannino's option of ordering dishes in either appetizer- or entrée-sized portions.

Because the little four-room cottage, built circa 1802, has significant historic value, it took three years for Overgaag to work out a design that satisfied his commercial needs while meeting the City of Cambridge Historical Commission's requirements. The original structure contains three small private dining rooms, and a large rear addition creates space for a 55-seat dining room, a bar area and a kitchen. So it turns out there's no truth to the rumor that the Red House would share cooking space with Charlie's Kitchen, just around the corner, although Overgaag does own the home of the famous double cheeseburger too. iB

Dance: Ballet Laugh

So perhaps you've seen Boston Ballet performances and have developed a healthy appreciation for the art of dance. Great. But have you ever laughed out loud during a ballet? Imagine a show in which ballet dancers are decked out as chickens and roosters trying to look graceful while cavorting with a live pony. A humorous ballet seems like an oxymoron, but there are more than a few chuckles in the new interpretation of Sir Frederick Ashton's La Fille Mal Gardée (The Wayward Daughter), the oldest classical ballet still being performed today (it debuted in France in 1789). Taking place in the French countryside, it tells the story of a young girl named Lise, who is in love. The road to romance is more than a little bit bumpy—the lovers are repeatedly thwarted by Lise's mother, and they encounter a never-ending roster of comedic characters. The Wang Theatre, 270 Tremont St., Boston (617-482-9393). www.wangcenter.org. $12.50-$82.

Comedy: Laughter Is the Best Medicine

On the night of Sept. 11, 2001, comedian David Brenner had a performance in Las Vegas. Understandably, the room was only 25 percent full. Several days later, a show he gave in California, however, was sold out. But a week later, when Brenner returned to Vegas, where shows rely on tourists to fill their audiences, attendance was way down. He quickly recognized the emerging pattern. "Americans were afraid to leave their towns and cities, but not afraid to leave their homes." In response, Brenner launched his Laughter to the People tour, which makes its way to the Comedy Connection Feb. 21 and 22. "This is not a time for us to hide—but it is the time to escape, if only for an hour or two, or a minute or two," says Brenner, who's appeared on the Tonight Show a record 158 times. 245 Quincy Market Place, Faneuil Hall, Upper Rotunda, Boston (617-248-9700). MBTA: Green or Blue Line to Government Center. Feb. 21, 8 and 10:15pm; Feb. 22, 8 and 10:15pm. $25 and $27.

Music: Club Anniversary

For the past five years, Club D'elf has electrified the cozy confines of Cambridge's Lizard Lounge with what the band's founder, Mike Rivard, calls "live dub-trance-groove excursions." The experimental group, which played its inaugural show at the Lizard Lounge, is celebrating its fifth anniversary with a performance at the Lizard this month. Club D'elf's sounds are as eclectic as ever—a range of electronica, hip-hop, funk, jazz and sometimes Moroccan and West African beats. Guest musicians add a special twist; some temporary artists who've made musical forays into D'elfdom have included John Medeski, DJ Logic, the late Mark Sandman and Dana Colley (Morphine). Doors open at 9pm, but the band doesn't get going until 10pm, which leaves plenty of time to swing by the adjoining Cambridge Common to grab an order of delectable sweet potato fries. Tickets are $10; Club D'elf also plays at the Lizard Lounge March 13. 1667 Mass. Ave., Cambridge (617-357-5825).

Mind in the gutter? Leave it there. The newest act in town, Puppetry of the Penis: The Ancient Art of Genital Origami, might not be in good taste, but it is in good fun. The two-man show comes to the Copley Theatre Feb. 26, and let the bashful be forewarned: Full-frontal is the name of the game. Years ago, Australian upstart and show creator Simon Morley discovered a talent for contorting his manhood into recognizable shapes and has since parlayed his skill into an acclaimed comedy show. He and fellow Aussie David Friend have been brandishing their limber members at sold-out shows since 1998. Morley admits the exhibition has absolutely no plot: Puppeteers dressed in capes (and little else) twist and stretch their nether regions into more than 40 installations. Crowd favorites include the Hamburger, the Loch Ness Monster and the Windsurfer. Morley and Co. promise to localize the act by paying homage to Boston landmarks in creative ways. Perhaps the Prudential or the Zakim Bridge will get some stage time. *225 Clarendon St., Boston (617-236-1199). Opens Feb. 26. Ongoing. Now enjoy resurgence in popularity, comics have moved out of the dime store and into boutique markets and movie theaters. Here's y chance to explore Comics as Art—works that have elevated form from kids' picture books to genuine pieces of art. Movies: Out of Africa

You can do it. Tear yourself away from the highly addictive, mind-numbing substance known as TV's Sweeps, get out there and watch something worthwhile. Make it 100 Days, a feature at the Museum of Fine Arts' African Film Festival. The film tackles the tragic subject of the genocide of 800,000 Tutsis by order of Rwanda's Hutu government in 1994. English writer and director Nick Hughes witnessed the ethnic cleansing that lasted 100 days. After making a few documentaries about the massacre, he wrote this feature film, which follows a Tutsi family's struggle to survive the attacks and also includes a love story. Hughes and Rwandan producer Eric Kabera (who lost 32 members of his family during the violence) filmed the movie where the massacre took place, hiring locals—many of whom had never seen a camera or a movie before—as actors. The resulting full-length film, set in the breathtaking Rwandan countryside, is a high-production quality, English language movie that isn't as graphic as you might expect. Although it unblinkingly focuses on the genocide, it also explores the political side of the situation, the U.N.'s role in the massacre. 465 Huntington Ave., Boston (617-267-9300). www.mfa.org. 6pm.

CityScope: Celebrating Black History Month

More and more national groups seem to be claiming nomenclatural rights over each month of the year. February, for example, is dubbed National Children's Dental Health Month, Bird Feeding Month, Grapefruit Month and Snack Food Month by various national organizers. But Black History Month (recognized by Americans since 1926, first as Negro History Week) is an exception to all of the silliness, and there are lots of ways to take part in this worthy tribute throughout February. On Feb. 28, the U.S.S. Constitution at Charlestown Navy Yard hosts an afternoon of Black History Month events. Of course, you can tour the historic U.S.S. Constitution, and, if you can stay warm enough, take part in the festivities, which include several performances by the Black Nativity Choir and candle lightings in honor of naval heroes. There'll also be a slew of speeches, including two from state reps Gloria Fox and Marti Wilson. Better still, it's all free. Charlestown Navy Yard, Charlestown (617-242-7511). 1pm.

Performing Arts: Banned in Boston

The New Repertory Theatre's latest production, No Niggers, No Jews, No Dogs, caused a minor controversy last month when Metro daily newspaper's publisher, Russel Pergament, decided not to spell out the full title of the play—instead usin blanks and asterisks in place of "niggers" and "Jews"—in a listing for upcoming shows. According to a Jan. 25 Boston Globe article, Pergament thought the full title would be "troublesome to many readers." In fact, says playwright John Henry Redwood, the title was "inspired by a road sign I actua saw in the South [and] reflects the racism which the play's characters must face in their daily conflicts." Set in North Carolina in 1949, the show focuses on a black woman who must raise her family while her husband is away earning mon Meanwhile, a Jewish sociologist who's been observing the family becomes a part of their lives..."even though he is not colored," reads the theater's Web site as of Feb. 13. Embarking on a Brand New Odyssey

The American Repertory Theatre recasts Homer's classic in jazz, rock and blues

In the American Repertory Theatre's latest production, a reclusive war veteran named Ulysses receives an urgent call in the middle of the night and embarks on a journey to find his son. On his way, however, he gets waylaid by a motley cast of characters—including a waitress at a truck stop, a trio of sirens in a jail cell, a one-eyed librarian and a woman in a tattoo parlor—who force him to confront his violent past and propel him toward the fateful meeting with his estranged son.

If the plot line to Highway Ulysses sounds familiar, give yourself a gold star. It's a recasting of Homer's The Odyssey. The aforementioned one-eyed librarian, for example, is a stand-in for the cyclops. He imprisons Ulysses in the library, and Ulysses ends up threatening to poke his eye out with a sharpened pencil.

"Some of the references are more obvious than others," says Rinde Eckert, who wrote the text and music for Highway Ulysses in a matter of months at ART director Robert Woodruff's request. The resulting production is a musical of sorts, with the Cambridge-based band Empty House Cooperative playing jazz, rock and blues in the orchestra pit. Although modernized and radical in its presentation, the show's language is elevated, says Eckert. "It's not pop vocabulary."

The story strays further from the original at the end. In Homer's tale, Ulysses returns from war to find his wife surrounded by suitors. He slaughters all of them and then, not surprisingly, finds himself under attack from their vengeful family members. Zeus dispatches Athena to restore the peace.

Eckert decided to do away with deus ex machina, the plot device in which the gods extricate the protagonist from a difficult situation. "That's not the way things happen in the real world," he says. "God doesn't come down and tell the Palestinians and Israelis to be nice to each other. A situation like that should be treated with a degree of gravity."

He won't reveal how he resolves Ulysses' predicament, but says, "It [doesn't] end on a hopeful note." American Repertory Theatre, 64 Brattle St., Cambridge (617-547-8300). MBTA: Red Line to Harvard. March 1-22. Tue.-Thu., 7:30pm; Fri., 8pm; Sat., 2 and 8pm; Sun., 2 and 7:30pm. $34-$68. —Julie Short

REDEMPTION SONG

Strange Fruit chronicles the classic protest song

BY PAUL SHERMAN

"Sometimes a short song taking just a few minutes can have as much impression on a listener as reading a whole novel," says folk music legend Pete Seeger in Joel Katz's documentary, Strange Fruit. If ever that notion were true, it is for the song "Strange Fruit." Made famous by Billie Holiday—and covered by dozens of others, including Seeger—it features perhaps the most haunting, moving set of lyrics ever written in the English language.

The lyrics begin, "Southern trees bear a strange fruit/Blood on the leaves and blood at the root/Black body swinging in the Southern breeze/Strange fruit hanging from the poplar trees." The lyrics continue in the same vein, juxtaposing the serene flow of words with the vivid, brutal images of a lynching. As someone else says in the movie, "This was the sort of thing that, when you first heard [it], you couldn't applaud at first, it was too gripping."

Although Holiday often claimed late in life that she commissioned the song, and says as much in the stunning clip of her performing it on BBC-TV in 1958, that's not the truth. The song was written by Abel Meeropol (1903-1986), the son of Jewish Russian immigrants and an English teacher at the Bronx's DeWitt Clinton High School when he wrote it in the late 1930s, under his pen name of Lewis Allan.

The hour-long Strange Fruit, which plays at the Coolidge Corner Theatre Feb. 21-March 6 (accompanied by a selection of Holiday performance clips), covers a lot of ground. It opens with background on Holiday's recording of the song in April 1939 for Commodore Records after Columbia Records passed on the tune; gives us Holiday's life and career story up until that point; details the vigilantism Southern blacks often suffered; and charts the song's impact (its lyrics were even read into the Congressional Record as part of a 1940s effort to have lynching made a federal offense).

You'd expect any movie about the song to cover these topics, and though Strange Fruit—very heavy on "talking head" interviews—has a rather bland style reminiscent of Ken Burns, it does well enough. But what makes the movie really interesting are its sequences on Meeropol.

Although the movie has no film footage of him, it gets across the fact that Meeropol was a fascinating man. Three of his colleagues from the American Federation of Teachers Local #5 recall vivid anecdotes about Meeropol that illustrate the creativity of 1930s Jewish-Leftist activism—not only political activism, but community activism in the broadest sense. The teachers' union regularly put out newsletters and put on shows, and these outlets provided the genesis of "Strange Fruit." Meeropol first wrote it as a poem in the union's newsletter, and after he wrote music for it, his wife Anne first sang it at a union talent show.

The publicist for Cafe Society, the Greenwich Square club where Holiday regularly performed, saw that performance of the song and arranged a meeting between Meeropol and the jazz singer. After Holiday recorded the song, singing it with a blend of defiance and hurt, it became a surprise hit, despite subject matter that caused many radio stations to ban the record.

But Meeropol's story doesn't stop there. He later cowrote the song "The House I Live In," which was sung by Frank Sinatra in the Oscar-winning 1945 short of the same name and revealed about as liberal a sentiment as the showbiz establishment ever allowed to pass through its system. And after Julius and Ethel Rosenberg were executed for allegedly passing atomic secrets to the Soviets, Abel and Anne Meeropol adopted the couple's sons, Michael and Robby, who are both interviewed in the movie. Considering that Meeropol wrote "Strange Fruit," this level of commitment is not surprising, but it sure is refreshing and touching. iB

Billie Holiday, accompanied by guitarist Jimmy McLin, made "Strange Fruit" famous in a 1939 recording.

Far from Heaven ★★
An amazing simulation of the 1950s suburban melodramas of director Douglas Sirk (All That Heaven Allows, Written on the Wind)—which still exist, happily, in many video stores. (At Copley Place, Kendall Square and suburbs.)

Final Destination 2 ★★★
The first was the umpteenth bad Scream knock off. But the sequel—which continues the premise of the original, in which those who've escaped death start dying one-by-one—is an intentionally comic succession of weird, wild death scenes. It's like a twisted cross of Jackass and Faces of Death. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Gangs of New York ★★
Watch Martin Scorsese obsess on detail and ignore "the big picture" for 160 minutes. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Gerry ★½
Gus Van Sant's semi-improvised, minimalist movie about two guys (Matt Damon, Casey Affleck) who get lost in the desert is too sparse for its own good. Though certain sequences are pleasingly absurd or hauntingly hypnotic, most of the time it's numbingly dull. You don't know anything about these guys or where they were trying to hike to, which is intentional, but nothing emerges to pick up the slack left by the lack of information (or give you a reason to care). Harris Savides' cinematography is alternately breathtaking and probing, but the movie still leaves you with little. (Opens Feb. 28 at Coolidge Corner and Kendall Square.)

The Life of David Gale ★★
This Texas-set thriller might have been a lot more thrilling with a little less of director Alan Parker's over-the-top treatment. The setup is strong enough to keep the first half involving, with Kate Winslet as an investigative print journalist who's given access to the title character (Kevin Spacey), a former professor and anti-death-penalty activist now on death row for a murder he claims he did not commit. Winslet does well playing an American here, and Spacey does his usual smart-and-smug stuff, but as the movie builds toward its climax it becomes more and more an excuse for Parker's overwrought theatrics. The reactions of Winslet's character become too overemotional for a woman whose hardened objectivity is her main trait (that's the point, but Parker can't pull off her transition). And Parker's maneuvering of the story so that he can stage an opera scene is self-indulgent and just plain silly. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Lord of the Rings: The Two Towers ★½
Come to the dark side, Frodo. It's got to be more fun than hanging around with your pasty friend and that computer-generated nuisance. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Lost in La Mancha ★★★
Director Terry (12 Monkeys) Gilliam finally got to start filming his dream project, a Don Quixote movie, in the fall of 2000. But the dream—which was being made as a cut-to-the-bone European production after Hollywood studios passed on the movie—turned into a nightmare. And this documentary (which presumably set out to be a making-of film to put on the eventual DVD of Gilliam's movie) captures it all: the frazzled preproduction, the week of shooting in Spain (where a nearby NATO air base, a storm that turns the desert location into a literal river and star Jean Rochefort's illness all wreak havoc) and the implosion of the production. Seeing all the bad luck this movie suffered from makes you wonder how any film turns out decently. Call this one Project Redlight. (At Kendall Square.)

The Navigators ★★★
It's subtitled "Stories from the Trackside," and the tale of a group of five English railway workers trying to survive the mid-1990s privatization of British Rail has an intimate, casual feel. That human touch is necessary. Otherwise it would be just too depressing to see the loss of community, camaraderie and common sense in one Midlands depot after the private-sector suits start sacrificing everything for the bottom line. Instead, it's veteran English director Ken Loach's best movie in a decade. (At the Brattle Theater, Feb. 21-27).

The Pianist ★★★
It's the little moments in Roman Polanski's Holocaust drama that make it work, like when a hungry family of six on their way to a concentration camp matter-of-factly carves up and shares a small piece of candy. Based on the memoirs of late Polish musician and Holocaust survivor Wladyslaw Szpilman, played here by Adrien Brody, the movie powerfully shows the gradual whittling away of Polish Jews' human rights (and humanity) once the Nazis invaded in 1939, and how the title character managed to stay alive. (At Copley Place, Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and West Newton.)

In The Recruit, Al Pacino plays CIA recruiter Walter Burke who taps James Clayton (Colin Farrell) to join the organization as a potential spy.

The Quiet American ★★★
The tragic legacy of U.S. "nation-building" abroad comes home powerfully in Philip Noyce's adaptation of Graham Greene's 1950s Vietnam-set thriller. Michael Caine plays the British journalist stationed in Saigon whose relationship to his second home and his young mistress (Do Thi Hai Yen) has a paternalistic sense-of-entitlement. Along comes Brendan Fraser as the title character, an idealistic U.S. medical aid worker who befriends the journalist and wins away his lover. The American also happens always to be in the right place at the right time, and it's soon clear he's up to more than he says and is at the heart of American meddling in the battle between the French and Vietnamese. Although the movie works better on a historical level than a personal level—it expects us to sympathize with the "impartial" Englishman much more than seems possible—it's a shrewd, outspoken drama. (At Copley Place and Kendall Square.)

The Recruit ★★
Who knew one man called all the shots at the CIA? That's right. He's dark, a little screwy and looks a whole lot like Al Pacino. But that notion is essential to the premise of this slick, semi-efficient and rather preposterous thriller. Pacino's character recruits MIT software wiz Colin Farrell (whose dead dad may or may not have been a spy). He trains him, plays mind games on Farrell's head like he's knocking on a xylophone, and gives the rookie his first big assignment. Al's even handing out the guns, too, as when he gives Farrell one and tells him to keep an eye on fellow rookie Bridget Moynahan. Pacino keeps telling Farrell that "nothing is as it seems," so maybe there's a more convincing script lying somewhere behind the one onscreen. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Rivers and Tides ★★★
Creatively filmed documentary about Scottish artist Andy Goldsworthy, who makes cool outdoor sculptures that usually get swept away by wind and water, taking the sand castle concept to beautifully bizarre extremes. (At Kendall Square.)

Shanghai Knights ★★★
Jackie Chan and Owen Wilson's latest in the Shanghai Noon series is another successor to the Bob Hope and Bing Crosby Road movies. The comedy material is old-school schtick, yet the chemistry between the stars is the real show. This time, the 1880s buddies travel to London to find the sneering aristocrat (Aidan Gillen) who killed Chan's father. They're aided by his high-kicking sister (Fann Wong) as they fight malice in the palace. The movie starts slowly and self-consciously uses 1960s British Invasion songs for the 1880s London action, but the combination of Chan and Wilson's camaraderie and the frenetic martial arts scenes make it almost as much fun as its predecessor. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

HIGHER GROUND

The Blind Boys of Alabama and Robert Randolph span the generations to bring gospel to new plateaus

BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

Clarence Fountain was a 10-year-old student at Alabama's Talladega Institute for the Blind when he found his calling in the school chorus. In contrast to the vocational training and routine beatings that students encountered, singing was a way out for Fountain and a few of his mates, who even slipped off school grounds to perform at a nearby military base.

"I'm not saying it was a smart thing to sneak off the campus and go sing, but that's what I really wanted to do," says Fountain, now 72. "As far as I was concerned, the school didn't have nothing important for me to learn."

The important learning came from the radio, through weekly broadcasts by the Golden Gate Quartet, a gospel group that the young men emulated. Leaving school to turn professional in 1944, and shifting toward the raw sound of "hard gospel," they adopted their name when a promoter booked a concert with rivals the Jackson Harmonies, billing the show as the Blind Boys of Alabama and the Blind Boys of Mississippi.

"Now they're gone, and we're still here, so that gives us more room to work," says Fountain, whose group plays a sold-out Somerville Theatre Feb. 28.

The Blind Boys of Alabama (From left: George Scott, Clarence Fountain and Jimmy Carter) have been spreading the Word for 63 years. Inset: Robert Randolph

The Blind Boys of Alabama are making the best of that room. The globetrotting group, last seen in town with Peter Gabriel at the FleetCenter, earned a Grammy for its 2001 disc, Spirit of the Century, and heads into this year's Feb. 23 ceremony with another nomination for the follow-up album, Higher Ground. On that CD, the Blind Boys were backed by young gospel sensation Robert Randolph and the Family Band.

"Everybody's heard of the Blind Boys of Alabama, especially from the church," says pedal-steel whiz Randolph, 24, whose group is also in town Feb. 28 (making a live collaboration possible, if unlikely) and March 1 at the Paradise. "You've got older guys in the church who say, 'You need to play like [the Blind Boys].' No matter what's going on, the older folks are always going to say 'This is real gospel.'"

Randolph, however, has brought gospel a long way from his Pentacostal church in New Jersey, attracting a new generation of converts with his jammin' blues-boogie attack. Church elders may not agree with his path, but Randolph is confident about it as he records his band's debut for Warner Brothers, promising "positive songs that uplift people and tell them to lean more towards good things in life."

"What you are singing about is the gospel. The gospel is the Word," he says by phone from a California tour stop. "That's what Clarence was talking about [at the sessions for Higher Ground]. We got into that a lot. He said, 'With the gospel, you sound like this.' And I'm like, 'Back in your day, you didn't have all these different sounds. The thing is to keep all the music in line with the Word, which is the gospel.'"

The Blind Boys have remained close to their musical roots, even while performing songs by Tom Waits, Ben Harper, Prince, the Rolling Stones and Stevie Wonder on their last two CDs.

"We listen to the lyrics and make sure that [people] aren't talking about their baby and their woman and this, that and the other," says Fountain. He still shares the stage with co-founders Jimmy Carter (whose aisle-roaming flights of testimony are legendary) and George Scott. "You make sure you stay on your path and do what the Lord wants you to do."

"If there's a line in there we don't like, we can take it out and rewrite a gospel line," Fountain says from his Louisiana home. "There was the song 'Higher Ground,' where the 'Lovers keep on lovin.' We knew that line didn't belong in the gospel song. So we took it out and put in 'Prayers keep on prayin.'"

In their early days, the Blind Boys resisted making reverse changes in gospel lyrics to ease their way into pop success the way Sam Cooke and Ray Charles did. This was before gospel became a profitable industry, and, according to Fountain, "the old contracts were based in the record company's favor, not in your favor."

But 63 years after the group's formation, the Blind Boys are spreading the Word farther than ever, selling CDs on Gabriel's Real World label and earning Grammy validation.

"I've always wanted to sing to the masses," Fountain says. "Now we're enjoying the fruits of the work we've done. It didn't jump off right then, but you have to wait on the Lord." iB

Anti-Hero of Anti-Folk

Adam Green basks in boyish irreverence

Several years ago, if you happened to tune in to MTV's Say What? Karaoke, you might have seen a goofy teenage contestant take liberties with Len's "Steal My Sunshine." He broke off his off-key rendering mid-verse and began hollering the same puzzling-yet-intriguing statement: "These burgers...are crazy! These burgers...are crazy!" Shocked silent at first, members of the studio audience slowly rose to their feet and then exploded with applause. No doubt more than a few MTV viewers pondered the same question: Is this the last we'll hear from Adam Green? Not likely.

I met Green nearly five years before his MTV debut while I was working at a small record store in Westchester County, N.Y. Green haunted the aisles nearly every day after school, rummaging the racks for rare vinyl and haranguing the clerk with obscure questions. ("Skip Spence played guitar in Moby Grape, right?") One day he arrived toting a box of cassette tapes he'd recorded in his basement with a backup band recruited from the local elementary school. "The Moldy Peaches?" I said glancing at the band name. "Come on."

Fast-forward eight years. Open mouth, insert foot. I find myself in the grips of an existential moment while contacting Green's PR guy to arrange a time for us to chat. After the release of the Moldy Peaches' debut album in 2001, their spoof-pop single "Who's Got the Crack?" made a strong showing on the U.K. charts. An extensive U.S. and European tour followed with the band supporting their friends and fellow New Yorkers, the Strokes. With song titles like "Downloading Porn With Davo" and a flamboyant live act featuring Green in a homemade Evel Knievel suit and his songwriting partner/childhood babysitter (seriously) Kimya Dawson in a bunny costume, the Peaches' oddball juggernaut took form. At 20, still looking like he was 12, Green found himself the ambivalent torchbearer of an unlikely movement: anti-folk—a term quickly co-opted by the media to describe songwriters who favor the acoustic medium but don't pen the flowery, stone-serious compositions associated with traditional folksters. Green believes it's a label that only leads to confusion.

"It's a real mess. A lot of people think that anti-folk is a style of music. It's not at all. It's a community of songwriters who have met each other through open mikes. The word 'anti-folk' really comes from the '80s. There was this cheesy folk scene in the West Village, and it was a reaction to that scene," he says. The anti-folk scene that Green refers to has its roots in punk rock. Songwriters inspired by punk played a type of fast, rhythmic, politically driven acoustic rock that, predictably, did not go over well at conventional folk showcases. Without a scene to call their own, they created one. "Everybody does their own thing," Green says. "I think it's been distorted by the media, like it's 'folk with an attitude.' That's retarded."

Currently the Moldy Peaches are on hiatus. Green is busy touring in support of his new solo album, Garfield, and laying down tracks for his follow-up record, which he hopes to complete this spring. A student of Beck, Elliot Smith and the late Skip Spence, Green has created a beautifully simple, boyishly playful and hysterically irreverent debut. As for his next album, he is trying to be more "melodically adventurous" by collaborating with a string quartet. And those who caught Green's disharmonious MTV appearance will be comforted to know that these days he's making it a point to "croon a bit more." Green plays Feb. 28 at T.T. the Bear's Place, 10 Brookline St., Cambridge (617-492-BEAR). 9pm. $8. —Daniel Schulman

Krush Hour

DJ Krush lets his turntables do the talking

Japanese trip-hop sensei-tion DJ Krush spins at the Middle East March 2.

Japanese trip-hop and hip-hop maestro DJ Krush will deliver one of his pyrotechnical turntable performances downstairs at the Middle East March 2. Krush has been behind the mixer for nearly two decades, and his chilled-out sound is known the world over. With seven full-length studio albums to his credit, he has recorded on a number of well-respected labels, including James Lavelle's Mo'Wax imprint. Nowadays, as a Sony recording artist, DJ Krush earned the status of a major-label musical commodity.

Though he speaks no English, he communicates with his American audiences through sound, and the freedom of his live performances provides a contrast to the the laid-back vibe of his recorded work. If there such a genre as hard-core trip-hop, DJ Krush might have invented it. Don't look for any techno or dance music influences in this DJ's music; listeners will find hip-hop squarely the center of his work, although he also borrows an improvisational sensibility from jazz.

A live video presentation will provide a swirling visual backdrop to Krush's musical soundscape. Seishi and Reazon, two of Boston's own trip-hop spinmeisters, will warm it for Krush—you might also recognize the duo from their local drum 'n' bass DJ work. Sei held a residency at the Rinse, a weekly drum 'n' bass party that is due to return from its hiatus at the end of April. Reazon spins drum 'n' bass every Friday night downstairs at th Ecko Lounge.

The Middle East Downstairs, 472-480 Mass Ave., Cambridge (617-864-3278). March 8pm. 18+. $12 in advance, $15 at the door.—Daniel Spurling

I Love Paris

Me: brown-haired twenty-something woman sipping a Cosmopolitan at the Blue Cat Café (impressed by your matchbook trick...). You, Parisian male model with sexy French accent who lives on Marlborough Street. You gave me your number; however, when I attempted to call you were on holiday in Viva la France. Then I made one more attempt and your phone was out of service. If you want to "brighten my day," please drop me an e-mail.

To A.F.

I am not a moron, I just have no common sense. There's a difference. That still means I am intelligent, mature and a worthy human being. I am not better than you and you certainly are not better than anyone. I have never met such an immature 62-year-old boy. I do not mumble—you are near-deaf! Get a hearing aid! I am certain I am not the only person you have ever bullied and harassed in the workplace, and I fear I will not be the last. Well, the next one to report you to Human Resources may actually have witnesses with backbones and integrity. You are a liar with no integrity. I pray no one destroys your spirit the way you tried to destroy mine. On the positive side, you have taught me many lessons I will never forget. You are a teacher and I pray for you to turn your evil ways to good and turn your negative energy to peace. I have moved on in the workplace to bigger and better things. If luck should have it, I will never meet your eyes again.
Goddess bless you,

I am crazy about you. I awaken with thoughts of you, go to sleep dreaming of you, of your blue eyes...dark hair... I have been crazy about you for all of these months. A smile from you brightens my whole day! You're so quiet and I barely say anything to you, but inside I am screaming, burning, wanting you so much.

Park Street Hopeful

It was 8pm on a Thursday at Park Street station. We were in line to buy tokens. You glanced over your shoulder—at whom? I can only hope that your ethereal gaze was meant for me. Your blue eyes were the color of the Mediterranean and your chestnut hair complemented your alabaster skin. You had a tan plaid scarf and a black coat. I watched helplessly from the line as you disappeared past the turnstiles into the station. Perhaps you noticed me? I had dark short hair, a suede jacket, a briefcase and was unshaven (I had a late night at the office). This is a shot in the dark, but I remain hopeful.
—parksthopeful@yahoo.com

Your coat does not fit me—can I have mine back?

Were you at the Roxy/Matrix on Jan. 25? Are you much taller than I am and currently perplexed because you have a small girl's coat with red gloves in the pockets? Want to trade back? I can't wear your coat—it's taller than I am! If you are missing your warm, wintry wear after an absurd night of unmitigated boozing (like I am), please e-mail me and describe your jacket. Hopefully we can orchestrate a swap meet!

Soulmates? MJLP

It was 10 years ago that you gave me a Tiffany's key chain with the inscription MJLP on the attached tag. Eight years ago you went to see a psychic in Salem after we broke up. He told you that I was still looking back in my heart for you and that we were truly soulmates. Well, he was right about my feelings. I have searched for you for years to no avail. I believed you had left Boston. I still love you and am willing to believe that psychic. On my birthday, Dec. 8, I saw you on Newbury Street. It was like a sign as I had also recently found that key chain as well. When I stopped to park my car and find you, you were gone. I searched for hours and have looked for you since with no luck. If you see this please try to contact me. You can find me through business in Jamaica Plain or online. I know not of your current life and will accept whatever fate falls before me. But I wish so much to just speak to you once more. PLMJ-MJLP? Min-Jeong you will always be my honey ya.

She's Running Her Fingers Through My Life

We met on April 21, 2000, through an introduction at the West Street Grille by a mutual friend. You are absolutely gorgeous. After laying eyes on you, I knew it would be the start of an amazing new millennium. Boy was I right. That seems like so long ago. We have built a relationship over the last several years that has brought us closer with each new day and each new adventure. We have had our share of challenges and learned to work together to overcome them. You are the sunshine in my life and I can't wait to see what the future holds for us. I love you more now than ever. Happy (belated) Valentines Day, Sweet Pea!

Argyle Socks

I don't have a clear idea of wha hope to gain by writing this Improper Impersonal (trust me, improper), but I keep thinking the guy in the black and orange argyles I saw on the Red Line o Jan. 24, around 8:30pm, on my home from the MFA. I got off at Harvard, you kept going. You w coat J.Crew would describe as "loden," with a hooded sweatsh underneath. And then there we those argyle socks. I wore a coa J.Crew does, in fact, call "camé with a red hat with a pompom. were reading Harper's. Shy and wanting to seem cheesy, I was doing the look/look away thing. not often I see someone who attracts me in the way you did, my relationship situation is, as say, "complicated," and it's Bos so the poker face won out...but curiosity is winning now. So if y are or if you know the argyles-wearing, Harper's-reading dude with floppy, wavy, dark hair who probably lives in Somerville or thereabouts, drop me a line.

Rockie Horoscope

FEBRUARY 19 – MARCH 4, 2003

PISCES FEBRUARY 19-MARCH 19

Solar Pisces starts the night of the 18th, and that is a good thing for you fish. For the rest of us, too. Although the more threatening planetary connections haven't finished dumping negativity on mere mortals, at least there are festivities we can look forward to. No sign appreciates the healing power of a common experience like the Fish, or is as willing to provide the thread that ties us together. So before Mardi Gras signals the end of the fun and the beginning of Lent, party on.

ARIES

MARCH 20-APRIL 19

Jumping the gun, again? Try to let a situation, as well as the expectations and emotions it is evoking, ripen on its own. Don't push for a dramatic resolution if something else has captured your attention (or because your impetuous Mars ruler is opposed by restrictive Saturn and you're feeling frustrated). Should more rules and regulations stand in your way, so be it. There's usually a reason for slowing down, one you'll discover in due time. Besides, this potent planetary opposition occurs only once every two years.

TAURUS

APRIL 20-MAY 20

A career or family matter could turn into high drama during the Leo full moon this weekend, especially if the situation is related to what was happening at the Taurus full moon eclipse in November. Think back to the week before Thanksgiving. That was also the time when the Scorpio sun formed a challenging square to disruptive Uranus and provoked further dissension and rebellion. Well, this week the sun meets Uranus and initiates an unusual, even a drastic approach to the problem. Brace yourself.

GEMINI

MAY 21-JUNE 20

Anticipate some frustration, even an argument, while take-aggressive-action Mars opposes prudent Saturn in your sign midweek. If you're being urged to do something you're not sure of, hold your ground and be patient. Because it's probably taken two years to fully appreciate Saturn's "slow and steady" course, you don't want to race through the final exam. In June, the next time Mars contacts Saturn, the grand master will be teaching Crabs major life lessons and Twins will be free of a long-term obligation and the negativity accompanying it.

CANCER

JUNE 21-JULY 22

What you currently value so highly may become a major concern as the Leo full moon focuses on your resources and your resourcefulness. Work might not go as smoothly as you expect simply because decisive Mars is opposed by restrictive Saturn in your twelfth house of self-undoing. Sabotaging yourself or harboring a secret enemy probably applies more to the U.S., a Cancer country, than to one lone Crab; nonetheless, that's what's happening. On a cheerier note, loving, artistic Venus is at home in your Capricorn marriage house.

LEO

JULY 23-AUGUST 22

Searching for the next hot item, fomenting a revolution on principle or simply bored with the same-old, same-old? A fresh approach, a wild idea—anything that makes the blood pound, your mind race or your heart sing. While inventive Uranus merges with your sun ruler this week, you're open to practically anything you haven't yet experienced. And that is exactly what you'll attract. However, an emotional full moon in your own sign can make your reaction to strange behavior equally memorable.

VIRGO

AUGUST 23-SEPTEMBER 22

If nothing especially interesting is happening career-wise (Saturn in your midheaven went retrograde four months ago), you can look forward to things picking up, albeit, slowly, after Saturn flips forward on the 21st. Also, having the sun in your Pisces house of partnership means that more people will want to share time and space with you. Despite the "two-ness" of the Fish credo, as long as your Mercury ruler is in independent Aquarius (until March 4), maintaining your own idiosyncratic identity will take precedence.

LIBRA

SEPTEMBER 23-OCTOBER 22

Fun and games—diverse and somewhat dangerous—could hold your attention for a while longer. Actually, the next two weeks would be a good time for a holiday, to someplace you haven't been and have few pre-conceived notions about. Strangely enough, restrictions on foreign travel (ninth house activities) may be lifted (for Libra-risers) when worry-wart Saturn in gadabout Gemini turns direct on the 21st. But if you're stuck somewhere (in school, in a religious tradition) you'd rather not be, that roadblock might be removed as well.

SCORPIO

OCTOBER 23-NOVEMBER 21

Money you stand to inherit, an award from an insurance policy, profits from an investment (if that still exists) could start flowing after Saturn switches direction (from retrograde to direct) on the 21st. While the lack (Saturn) of resources you share with others may have thwarted financial matters during the last four months, the situation will change once Saturn in your house of joint finances starts to move forward. Real progress could take a while longer, probably when Saturn enters watery sign friendly Cancer in June.

SAGITTARIUS

NOVEMBER 22-DECEMBER 21

A meaningful dialogue, no matter how clumsy, can begin once Saturn in your Gemini house of significant relationships makes a positive move on the 21st. Reluctance, fear or sheer inertia may have conspired to keep you dissatisfied with your business or life partnership. Saturn withholds, denies and generally tries to squelch whatever spontaneity or enthusiasm you have for a person or a project that involves that person. Saturn, aka the Grim Reaper, opposing your Sag sun can suck the life right out of you. And that's why these forecasts have been so depressing.

CAPRICORN

DECEMBER 22-JANUARY 20

You, above all other signs, should notice a change in the general atmosphere when your Saturn ruler switches from reverse to forward motion on the 21st. Even if you're not bodily jostled, insulted, slashed or burned by militant Mars' opposition to resilient Saturn, you'll withstand the attack, no matter whom or where it comes from. Remind yourself that having loving Venus in your sign until March 3 is a blessing, a comfort and a joy to be celebrated for as long as the goddess of beauty and art stays with you.

AQUARIUS

JANUARY 21-FEBRUARY 18

It's time for high drama, thanks to the royal presence residing in your Leo house of partners. Norma Desmond of Sunset Boulevard couldn't match the over-the-top effects of your partner's performance during the Leo-Aquarius full moon. An issue that's been buried (or quietly brewing) since the crucial lunar eclipse in November might rise from the depths of someone's smarmy unconscious to haunt you again. But if the pre-Thanksgiving period was a piece of cake, then you'll have nothing unpleasant to re-examine and no family garbage to recycle.

Last Scene Here BY JONATHAN SOROFF

At the Boston Center for the Arts: (top) Lava, a women's acrobatic troupe from New York; Richard Giglio, Richard D. Olson Jr., Scott Lowell and Joan Parker.

A GAY OLD TIME WITH THE THEATER OFFENSIVE

Decorum and good taste went by the wayside (and nobody seemed to give a damn) when the Theater Offensive held its annual fund-raiser, ClimActs! (The 2nd Coming) at the Boston Center for the Arts.

The evening began with a VIP reception (read: martini chug-a-lug) at which servers dressed in body paint worked the room with trays of hors d'oeuvres and guests got to ogle diminutive beefcake Scott Lowell, one of the stars from Showtime's Queer as Folk.

Present and accounted for: the organization's outrageous fairy godfather, Abe Rybeck (sporting his trademark demi-drag of dangling earrings and rhinestone choker); Cambridge grande dame Joan Parker and her other half, hard-boiled detective novelist Robert B.; Channel 7 on-air studmuffin Randy Price; arts supporter extraordinaire Anna Faith Jones; the ubiquitous Don Sturdy; Buzz maestro Harry Collings; realtor to the stars David Whitman; supersuave hair salon owner William George; the incomparably sparkly Stewart Clifford; pharmaceutical company hottie Frank Lipsitz; foodie flack Chris Haynes; and numerous equally intriguing others.

Following a performance by the award-winning lesbian acrobatic troupe Lava, there was a live auction that included such unconventional items as Drag School for Two and a Fluffer Package whose winner will attend a Hollywood party with legendary porn director Chi Chi LaRue.

Summing the evening up, one guest said, "This is pretty racy by Boston standards. Then again, so are most Disney movies."

LIKE HAVING COCKTAILS WITH THE OP-ED PAGE...

Linguist and intellectual giant Noam Chomsky sent an apologetic note explaining why he couldn't come. So did people's historian Howard Zinn.

Otherwise, there were very few no-shows at the reception held in the Lewis Wharf home of socialite and social activist Doris Yaffe to introduce the city's most influential citizens to Eric Kabera and Jean Nhanji, producers of the movie 100 Days, which involves the 1994 genocide in Rwanda.

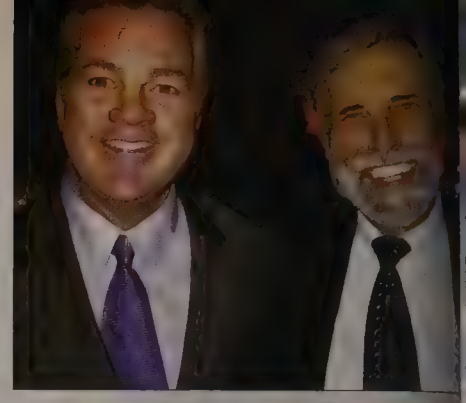
Despite the heavy subject matter, the catered affair remained light and upbeat, attracting such movers and shakers as TV personality and divinity student Liz Walker; Harvard School of Public Health dean Dr. Deborah Prothrow-Stith; Amnesty International honcho Joshua Rubenstein; indie film impresarios Joe Zina and David Kleiler; film producer Laura Bernieri; power couples Geri Denterlein and Jack Thomas and Kathy and Richard Taylor; landscape designer and noted horticulturalist Heidi Kost-Gross and her daughter, Lexi, who does research for the Kennedy School at Harvard; and Haitian smoothie Jean Marc Nelson, not to mention numerous names that appear prominently on the mastheads of important publications, which prompted one guest to observe, "If you locked the front door and threw away the key, you could effectively put an end to journalism as we know it."

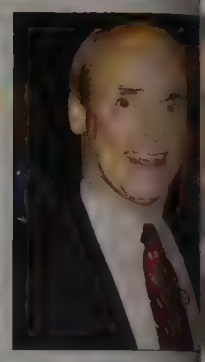
At Doris Yaffe's house, clockwise from upper left: Bunni Roberts, Carol Fulp, Dr. Deborah Prothrow-Stith and Kathy Taylor; Eric Kabera; Debbie Lewis; Jean Marc Nelson and Bonnie Meltzer; Liz Walker and Joan Jolley.

DEAN MARTIN, EAT YOUR HEART OUT...

If power is an aphrodisiac, then everyone must have gone home feeling turned on by the King Tom Tonight Show, the charity roast of House Speaker Tom Finneran, held at the Comedy Connection, to benefit Boston College High School's WB56 Scholarship Fund.

Among the high and mighty seen sipping cocktails and basking in the warm glow of proximity to other extremely well-connected people from the realms of politics and the media: his blow-dried excellency Mitt Romney; City Hall grand poobah Tom Menino; comedian (and the evening's emcee) Steve Sweeney; WB political pundit Jon Keller; broadcasting behemoth David Brudnoy; newspaper columnist and talk radio chatelaine Margery Eagan; state auditor Joe DeNucci; WB56 honcho Vinnie Manzi; the club's owner, Bill Blumenreich; WBZ anchor Joe Shortsleeve; political correspondent Andy Hiller; majority leader Salvatore DiMasi; state senator John Hart; and so on and so forth down the line of people whose names appear prominently in print and TV or are stenciled on doors along the corridors of power. In fact, that sucking sound you heard on Beacon Hill was the vacuum created by the high-octane assembly, and it was a feat just to fit so many enormous egos into a single room. Nevertheless, the event was an unqualified success, not only raising major dough for a worthwhile cause but offering (on average) several laughs per minute.





At the Comedy Connection, from top: Joe Shortsleeve and William Kemeza; Mitt Romney; Tom Finneran; Margery Eagan and David Brudnoy.

A sampling of the evening's humor: Didi and Friends, who provided t music, singing, "Whatever Tom Wants, Tommy Gets."

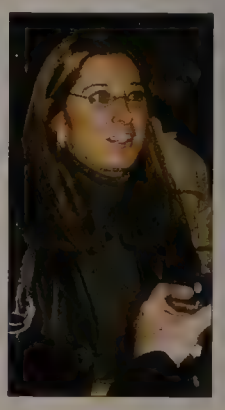
And David Brudnoy spotting Romney the front row and saying, "How're you doi tonight, Governor? How are the wives?"

However, it turned out that Romn had the best gag writer, as the govern poked fun at himself with such lines as had an accident on my way here; tripped and broke my hair," as well getting a few jabs in at Finneran wi quips like "I worship the people he wal on" and "It's like working with t Pope...except with the Pope you onl have to kiss his ring."



When the roast w over, the politicia and their flunkies l in high spirits and turned to the ha work the taxpaye have come to expe from them—name polishing their mat ial for the annual S Patrick's Day brea fast in Southie. IB

ON SOROFF

I want you to know how much I enjoy reading Soroff/On. I have so much respect for Soroff's ability to bring someone to life in such a short piece. And with such humor—sometimes outrageous but always respectful!

I have just read about Thalassa Ali (Feb. 19) and, though Soroff hardly mentioned her book, it is a must-read for me now that I know what I know about Thalassa. Thanks, again.

SEEING STARS

I have to say that I have never run across a movie critic who is more ridiculous and off the mark than the IMPROPER's Paul Sherman. My boyfriend and I moved here from San Francisco thinking Boston was going to be a new and exciting place to live. I learned right away that THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN was the place to read about hip places to go, see and be. Right now, we are laughing at the reviews that have been written by a so called "movie expert."

According to Sherman's ratings, Chicago and Shanghai Knights are the same quality of movie, but Shanghai Knights is leaps and bounds better than Lord of the Rings. Just Married and A Guy Thing are just as good, if not better than Gangs of New York and again, far better than Lord of the Rings. Obviously this frat-boy critic is not into "Dungeons & Dragons"-type amazing special effects and exciting plot, but he is a fan of cookie-cutter romantic comedy. To say that A Guy Thing is way, way above Lord of the Rings is absolutely laughable. I have asked around and I am not alone in thinking that the star assignments of your movie reviews are a little off. I hope that Bostonians don't use this as their only guide when choosing a movie. They will be disappointed.

TWO SIDES OF EVERY PELT

Who else but Mopsy Strange Kennedy could have found a store that "can even meet fur needs for princely children" ("Think Mink," Mopsy, Feb. 5)?

My 4-year-old niece has a birthday coming up, and I didn't want to fall back on another Hummer or a gift certificate for more Botox injections. Thanks, Mopsy, for the inspired suggestion.

—ANDY LEVINSKY
Newton

I am so tired of the anti-fur bandwagon. Does the writer of "Fur Pas" (Letters, Feb. 19) own anything leather or suede? There's nothing glamorous about where that came from, either. I love my fur. Nothing is warmer. I wish I could afford the minks I'm sure Mopsy was referring to. I think wearing a natural fiber coat that will last 25 to 30 years is much better for our world than buying and wearing man-made materials that will eventually end up in a landfill.

If Mopsy wants to wear fur, she can. If you don't like fur, my God, then don't buy and wear one. But don't tell me I can't buy, wear and enjoy one because you or some celebrity is refusing to!

Mangelsdorf loves writing about the human side of the economy, providing readers with useful information that can help them better manage their businesses, navigate their careers or handle their money. Her story, "Living the Good Life for Less," appears on page 16.

EDITOR'S NOTE

ON THE MONEY

We live in one of the most expensive cities in the U.S. In its cost of living ranking of 354 U.S. metro areas, the Places Rated Almanac puts Boston at No. 350, with only Orange County, Calif.; Honolulu; San Francisco; and New York ranking higher.

Even if you'd never think of leaving this town, it's fun to look up where cities rank in the almanac and imagine the monstrous homes you could buy in Topeka, Kans., or Rapid City, S.Dak., for the same price as a one-bedroom condo in the Back Bay. (Though you might be hard-pressed to find a job in those towns to meet the mortgage payments.)

For one feature (page 22) in this, our first Money Issue, editorial assistant Jessica Iredale tackled the task of comparing costs for some everyday necessities (cab fare, the daily newspaper, a bagel, etc.) in Boston with those of four other cities. Think that too much of your spending money goes to cab fare? Note that Boston hacks command higher per-mile rates than those in New York.

Because smart money management and belt-tightening strategies have become a priority for many of us in the current economic climate, this issue also holds stories on those topics. Writer Kate O'Sullivan files pithy advice from 10 financial gurus (page 20), and Martha Mangelsdorf offers simple tricks for spending less (page 16).

If the statement in Mangelsdorf's story that millionaires tend to have a frugal mindset is true, then even this issue's successful cover-boys, Antoine Walker and Paul Pierce, may be among those reading her article. In his interviews with the Celtics co-captains (page 14), Jonathan Soroff gets them laughing with questions they never expected.

Blue Sky at Night

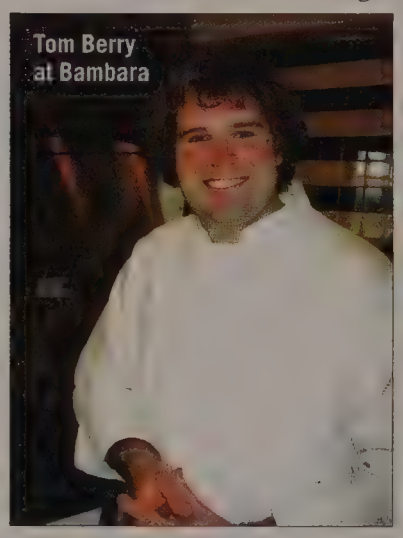
Blue Sky Grille

Last month, Blue Sky Grille filled the Somerville spot that restaurant/club 608 (previously Lilli's nightclub) vacated six months ago. The newest venture combines some aspects from the establishments that have gone before it, but Blue Sky Grille is geared for a slightly more mature, more mainstream crowd. Like 608, Blue Sky Grille offers casual dining (steaks, burgers and pasta) at reasonable prices. And like Lilli's, the Grille offers live music—only this time instead of raucous rock bands, it's blues and classic rock.

"We want to be a destination for people to see great blues acts and have a great meal," says chef Bill Morella. "Neighborhood folks come in regularly, and they're not just here to drink." Owners Ed and Marianne Robbins have freshened up the club's appearance, painting the chairs black with stars and the bar sky-blue, and adding an array of posters from blues and classic rock bands. At 9 on Friday and Saturday nights, the Grille goes clubby, with local blues and classic rock acts taking the stage before an audience of up to 300 people. The other days of the week, you'll hear recorded blues and classic tunes from the likes of John Lee Hooker, Bob Seager and the Allman Brothers. 608 Somerville Ave., Somerville (617-718-0737). Weekends: $6-$10 cover.

Coming Soon...

A slew of restaurants are slated to open in mid- to late-March. Here's a sneak peek:



Tom Berry at Bambara

•Bambara 25 Edwin H. Land Blvd., Cambridge (617-868-4444)
Projected opening: March 21
Why should people take notice? "Bambara's striking interior design by Robert Puccini Design is as integral to the restaurant as the food," says executive chef Tom Berry, who worked with Ming Tsai at Blue Ginger for the past five years. "I'm looking forward to the opportunity to return to my culinary roots with an emphasis on American cuisine, while using the best ingredients available [and] to have fun with flavor, taste and texture."

•Kings 10 Scotia St., Boston (617-266-2695)
Projected opening: The second week in March
Why should people take notice? Kings is the first bowling alley to be built in central Boston in 40 years, says operations manager Stephen Coyle. "It's just pure fun. It's a cool place for people to play pool, go bowling and have classic American fare prepared by former Sonsie sous chef Art Welch. Plus, we have a great cocktail list."

•George 384 Boylston St., Boston (phone not yet listed)
Projected opening: Around April 1
Why should people take notice? We're going to have all the defrocked priests from the archdiocese bartend here," jokes owner Gordon Wilcox. "No, seriously, it's going to be American tavern cuisine made with old-time recipes—everything from finn and haddy to cod stock and our own baked beans. Upstairs there's going to be a comfortable lounge called Georgia."

•Great Bay 500 Comm. Ave., Boston (617-933-5300)
Projected opening: "Every opening is a moving target," says co-owner Christopher Myers. "Great Bay is opening soon."
Why should people take notice? "Our chef, Jeremy Sewall, is a major talent. He's been working with Bradley Ogden in San Francisco for the last five years, which means he's been cooking with the best seafood and produce that this country has to offer," says Myers. "The design...is a screaming success. It's a magnificent new direction for a seafood restaurant in Boston. No plastic for starters! How's that for a welcome relief. No paper place mats! Whoopee! Our plan is to give the city best known for great seafood a venue for serving that great seafood with sophistication, casual elegance and good humor."

•Peking Tom's 25 Kingston St., Boston (617-482-6282)
Projected opening: Late March
Why should people take notice? "Remember those neighborhood Chinese places from your childhood, where you'd get mai tais and pu-pu platters? They were good, but a lot of the foods were fried. That sort of fell out of favor in past years," says owner Mike Conlon. "Peking Tom's is an Asian restaurant that's steps above the normal, with Marc Orfaly from Pigalle overseeing the menu and his sous chef, Rob Johnson, in the kitchen. We're like a Shanghai lounge that takes mai tais, zombies and scorpion bowls to a new level."—E.H. and J.S.

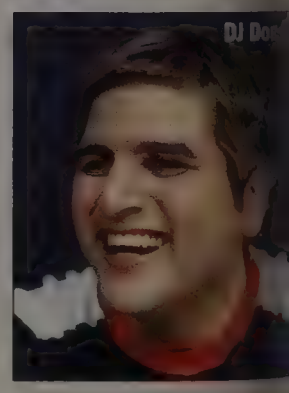
SPORTS

Spring Training

Pull on Your Warm Sox... While Theo Epstein was busy in Fort Meyers pondering who might play first base for the Red Sox's home opener against the Orioles April 11, Mother Nature was working her influence back home. The Presidents' Day storm's 27.5 inches of snow slowed the furious construction of new seats atop the Green Monster, and it's looking like the April 29 game against the Royals might be the first time fans can get a bird's-eye view of Manny's 'fro. (Speaking of Manny, we'd ask him what he thinks about major league baseball's crackdown on excessively long pants this year, as he is a leading proponent of the baseball-pants-as-footie-PJs look, but...well, you know, there's that media silence thing.) Tickets for the 275 new seats atop the Monster went on sale March 1 and cost $50.—Ezra Dyer

CLUB SCENE

Underground Sound



DJ Doc

•It seems the Trancesetters were right when they declared that "the underground will live forever, baby." To prove it, local underground company Redlight Productions is about to celebrate six years of Wednesday nights at the Phoenix Landing March 5 with guest DJ Doc Martin. A founding father of the West Coast sound, Doc Martin serves as an ambassador of house music around the world. Redlight founder Shannon Shalako returns from a sabbatical in Munich to be on hand for the event, and they're joined by resident DJ Caseroc and San Francisco's David Skye. Judging by the long waiting line that stretched down Mass. Ave. for last year's anniversary bash, you should plan to arrive plenty early.

•Local progressive-house fans who have been wondering what Ali Ajami has been up to lately will be pleased to learn that he's back in town. Although club-goers will be able to catch him on Lansdowne Street sometime soon, Ajami is also slated to make his first after-hours appearance March 9 at Sunrise at Tantra for an all-night journey. DJ Taner K. kicks things off at 3am.

•Futurebeat, an aptly named new Sunday night party at LaBoom, is well under way after getting started in January. Futurebeat resident DJ Addambombb describes the musical concept as "alien disco," promising an innovative experience where patrons might hear anything from trip-hop to trance, or even electro. —Daniel Spurling

The New Malt Alternative

From Ice Cream to Thin Ice... Needham native and Boston College grad Mike Herbert has had a flavorful past—he opened J.P. Licks at age 24 and four years later sold his share to start Island Oasis, one of the nation's best-selling frozen-beverage companies. In 2000, he started Long Beach Brewing Company in Norwood, Mass., selling the super-popular Sublime brand drinks. Now he's hoping to have similar success with Thin Ice, a 90-calorie, one-carb beer alternative. Bostonians have the first opportunity to taste this Atkins-friendly malt beverage this month before it's distributed nationally in April. Based on Herbert's record alone, we're predicting another winner.

Here's the Beef... Earlier this year, the media was all abuzz about the $41 hamburger at New York's Old Homestead restaurant. The sandwich consisted of beer-fed Kobe beef with lobster mushrooms and microgreens on a Parmesan twist roll. We found a much better deal. Local Deluxe Town Diner in Watertown recently announced its new Kobe beef burger—from cattle raised in Texas, not Japan—for only $10.95. And no, there's no caviar or foie gras on this one, but it does come with a bun, fries and salad.

Hot Heads... The folks at Cambridge's East Coast Grill served up three nights' worth of five-alarm dishes at the biannual Hell Night Feb. 24-26. This year's event, themed Beware in the Square: The Devil Is My Sous Chef, attracted challenge-seeking spice-a-holics in droves to sample the special menu's fiery delights rated from two to 10 bombs. As of Feb. 25, owner Chris Schlesinger reported that out of the 40 patrons who ordered the ultimate atomic dish, Pasta from Hell, only two finished their meal (past Pasta From Hell tasters have fainted, been hospitalized and filed suit against the grill). The only person ever to clean his pasta plate is a teenage Hell Night devotee known to staff members as "the Kid." Your next chance to singe you tastebuds is summertime, but you'll need to be on your toes: Space fills up more than a month in advance.—Jessica Iredale, E.H. and J.S.

Fabric Find

When I walked into Zimman's furniture store in Lynn, I was overwhelmed, to say the least. There was fabric as far as the eye could see in every design imaginable. Even the least decorative-minded person would be inspired to create some sort of domestic masterpiece when faced with the first floor of this 100-year-old store. There's nothing like it in Boston. The folks at Zimman's have always catered to designers and individuals by helping them select fabrics, but they recently added another service—the custom bedding program. You pick the fabric you want, and they create personalized duvet covers, comforters, bedspreads, bedskirts, pillows, pillow shams and headboards for your bedroom. That means it's time to discard that comforter you've had since college. Design the perfect creation that nobody else will have. *80 Market St., Lynn (781-598-9432). IMPROPER REPORTS

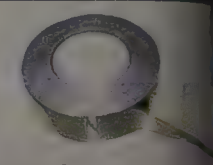
Duct Tape, Anyone?



Terrorism anxiety for Americans and embarrassment for some government officials translated into short-lived profits for some Boston-area hardware stores last month. Announcements from the Department of Homeland Security Feb. 10 advised Americans to protect themselves from a possible terrorist attack by purchasing duct tape and plastic sheeting for their windows and doors. The frenzy that ensued caused sales of both products to jump nationwide. Weeks later, though, representatives from the department retracted the statement (hello, suffocation, anyone?). So what happened at local hardware stores?

•Connelly Hardware Co., Brookline (617-277-7349). "People called in and said, 'Do you have the plastic sheets that protect you from the terrorists?' " says owner Kathleen Connelly. "It was kind of a frenzy. We ordered five times the amount we normally would in the course of a week."

•Beacon True Value Home Center, Beacon Hill (617-523-1148). "It wasn't full-fledged panic or anything like that—we just had unusually higher sales for both items," says owner Mike Haley.

•Economy Hardware Co., Back Bay (617-536-4280). Manager Aaron Rogers says, "Sales of both duct tape and plastic sheeting went up considerably. We sold out on plastic a couple of times and had to reorder."

•Parks Paint & Hardware, Back Bay (617-536-0913). "We sold out completely of both items after the initial scare," manager Lex Stevens says. "But there was just that one surge. It has dropped back to normal."

•Seaport Hardware, South Boston (617-426-8848). Owner Eric Joseph recalls, "Two weeks ago, people came in every half hour in a panic. I think they were afraid we would run out."—Bridget Behling and E.H.

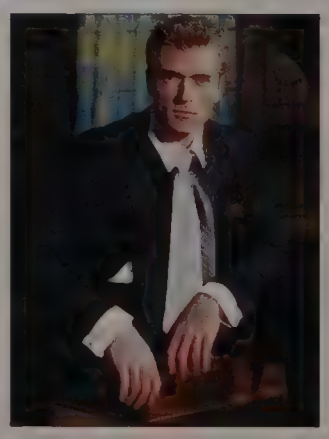
SEEN, OVERHEARD OR OTHERWISE BROUGHT TO OUR ATTENTION

A hole big mess... As if icy roads and 10-foot mounds of snow weren't enough, Old Man Winter has set a few more obstacles in our path—potholes. One of our staffers recently dipped into a doozie while driving down Soldiers Field Road on a rainy Saturday night. When he got out to inspect the damage (a blown-out tire), he noticed about 20 hubcaps littering the road and a handful of stranded cars who'd been similarly incapacitated by the hole (one was a mutilated Porsche). To add insult to injury, the unlucky staffer wasn't allowed to call AAA for a free tow—instead, the state police forced him, and numerous others who were sidelined, to use a $90 towing service. So why didn't the state police immediately shut down the road to prevent others from driving into the gaping hole? It's a good question, one that may eventually be settled in a court of law ("Why should I pay for the city's negligence?" fumed the staffer). But the good news in all of this is that the city of Boston recently opened a pothole hotline so drivers can report the problem, and the city can dispatch a crew to repair it right away. Plus, it turns out, if you come out of the incident with more than a bumpy ride, the city might be responsible for footing the bill. A spokesperson for Mayor Menino's office reports that there have been more than 228 claims filed with the City Clerk's office since Jan. 3. Call 617-635-3050 for hotline information.

Get Real... Lots of locals have entered the limelight via reality TV shows—among them, Lori from MTV's The Real World 10: Back to New York and Ethan from Survivor Africa. Now another one of our homeboys has made the leap to "reality." Brawny Robert Redford–look-alike and Click model Xavier (right) joined the cast of Fox's Married by America. There aren't millions of dollars at stake on this one, but Xave gets to be a potential spouse for one of five singles whose marriage is arranged through the national audience. Tune in to Fox Mondays at 9pm starting March 3 to see if you can vote Xavier down the aisle.



Email Ire... Members of Boston's A-List—an e-mail list of more than 7,000 local party-goers—hardly acted like VIPs recently when one member trying to contact the list's owner erroneously e-mailed several thousand members, spurring respondents to shoot off "reply to all" e-mails requesting removal from the list. As more and more of those requests mounted in members' mailboxes, the messages became more irate, like this one: "I'm really getting tired of whatever b.s. is going on with this mailing list!!! Remove me now!!!!" Several hours later, the list's owner, who goes only by Steve, sent members an apology and explained how he had corrected the problem. "Once I became aware of the issue, I left work and cancelled my hosting and service provider." Whether recipients of the barrage of e-mails will be able to get over their apoplexy remains to be seen. But, Steve says, "this cannot and will never happen again!" If it does, Boston's A-List may become Boston's P.O.'d List.

Home Run... Word on the street is that fellow Red Sox players Trot Nixon and newcomer Kevin Millar will be rounding home together on and off the job. Both ballplayers have just staked claims in Boston's latest luxury residences at the Colonnade, slated to open April 1. The neighbors-to-be will live just about a mile away from the Green Monster, so they better have a good excuse for running late to practice.

Tax Attack

Tax tip No. 1: 1040-EZ isn't always for people named Ez

Besides working here at the IMPROPER, I earned a little extra money last year, and that's making my taxes a royal pain. If you have just one W-2 form, your taxes are relatively simple and could probably be done by any intelligent person in only 15 or 16 hours. But this year I got hit with a 1099-MISC form, which covers an independent business (swimsuit modeling, if you must know), so I had to contend with the scary world of itemized deductions.

The explanation for box 7 on the form reads, "If you are in the trade or business of catching fish, box 7 may show cash you received for the sale of fish." For a second I thought that the local Yakuza to whom I sell blackmarket eel bellies had reported my under-the-table fish trafficking to the IRS, and I was about to call my ninja death squad to exact 1099 forms of punishment when I remembered that I'd also done some freelance writing. Box 7 covers freelance writing as well as fishmongering. Who knew?

Since I'm too stingy to take my taxes to an accountant but too ignorant to do them by myself, I decided to compromise and try one of those online tax-filing services that translates IRS-ese into English and then plugs your answer into the appropriate form. These sites also do the math for you, which is nice if, like me, you own a graphing calculator that will solve quantum equations, but you only know how to use it to play Pong.

The questions on my super-duper online tax calculator started out easy: Did filer (me) die last year? I whipped out a mirror, fogged that sucker up, and confidently clicked "no."

Another easy question concerned the electric-vehicle tax deduction. Did I purchase a "new, four-wheel, electric-powered vehicle for use on U.S. public roads and highways?" Why, yes, I did. I drive it to my flying castle when I'm not riding my unicorn.

The business-expense deductions section was harder, but still good fun, because as I added up my deductions a refund tracker in the corner of the screen kept posting an ever-higher number. Trying to make the refund-o-meter go higher was a dangerously tempting game. However, one nice aspect of being a writer is that as long as you've got receipts, you can make deductions for things you wrote about. That's why you might want to skip to the next paragraph while I pay some taxes. Ahem... one half gallon of Happy's Rotgut gin, a case of Enzyte male enhancement pills, a massage in Chinatown, a one-year membership www.truckstopharlots.com, one tattoo readi "Lucy," one laser tattoo removal, a pizza visit from a bail bondsman, and a cab rid (Providence to Boston). See, writers. Jus keeping track of your receipts for 24 hou can save you some real money!

When you're all done, the IRS lets yo "sign" electronically by typing in your ad justed gross income from last year, which a piece of information that "only you an the IRS know." Or, in my case, a piece of in formation that only the IRS know Couldn't I call the IRS and give them som other type of confidential password, one which I might actually have access Couldn't I just tell them which brand deodorant gave me a rash in my righ armpit? I'm pretty sure I didn't tell anyon about that, because I couldn't wear any de odorant for a couple weeks afterwards and didn't want any of my friends or coworker to be able to pinpoint where the B.O. wa coming from. So that could be our little se cret, me 'n' the IRS. We're buds, righ And buds don't audit buds, right?

I have one other tax reform proposa When I donate generously to my alm mater, they ask if I'd like to designa where I'd like my contribution to go, suc as toward a bagel in the dining hall o brick in a new building. I think the gov ernment would do well to adopt a simila system. It would take a lot of the sting o of paying taxes, for instance, if you coul check a box at the end of your return sayin "invade France," or "for satellites tha shoot lasers at France" or "for installatio of fascist dictatorship in Germany to r mind France who her daddy is."

In the meantime, I'll be working o maximizing my deductions again for nex year. Who wants to have my baby? iB

ANTOINE WALKER AND PAUL PIERCE

BY JONATHAN SOROFF PHOTOGRAPHS BY BOB PERACHIO

Antoine Walker and Paul Pierce are co-captains of the Boston Celtics.

Antoine Walker is from Chicago and played for the University of Kentucky, where, as a sophomore, he made the All-SEC First Team and in the NCAA title game (a 76-67 victory over Syracuse) contributed 11 points, a team-high nine rebounds and four assists. He ranks No. 1 in the NBA in minutes per game and three-point field goals made and attempted. His brilliant rookie year with the Celtics got him named to the 1996-97 NBA All-Rookie First Team, and he led the Celtics in field goals made and attempted and blocked shots. As the workhorse on a team whose roster was thinned by injuries, he was the only Celtic to appear in all 82 games, making 68 starts. The next year, he recorded four points, three rebounds and three assists in his All-Star debut. In 2000-01, he played in 81 games, starting in all of them, and set the team record for three-pointers made and attempted in a season, leading the NBA in both categories. He was also the only player in the NBA to finish in the top 20 in points, rebounds, assists and steals per game. During the 2001-02 season, he scored eight points and grabbed two boards in 16 minutes during his second All-Star appearance, and he became one of only four players in the NBA to average 20-plus points, seven-plus rebounds and five-plus assists, as well as leading the NBA in three-pointers made and attempted.

Paul Pierce was born and raised in California and played at the University Kansas, where he earned MVP honors in the Big 12 Conference Tournament in bo 1997 and 1998 and was a First Team All-America selection in his junior season. Th past January, Kansas retired his number, 34. In the NBA, he ranks No. 1 in fr throws, free-throw attempts and free throws per 48 minutes. In his first season wi the Celtics (1998-99), he was a unanimous selection to the Schick All-Rookie Fir Team and ranked second among rookies in scoring, three-pointers made and a tempted, three-point percentage, rebounds and steals. In the 2000-01 season, was the only Celtic to start in all 82 games and became the first Celtic to score 2,0 points since Larry Bird. The same season, Pierce led the team and finished eighth the league in points per game and was named NBA Player of the Month for Ma 2001. During the 2001-02 season, he made his first appearance in the NBA All-S Game, was twice named NBA Eastern Conference Player of the Week, was the on Celtic to start and appear in all 82 games, and became the first Celtic in team histo to finish as the league leader in total points scored.

Jonathan Soroff: I went to Duke, so I kinda hate Kentucky. Tell me one good thing about that school.

Antoine Walker: The tradition.

JS: So who has more style, you or Paul Pierce?

AW: More style? Me. Just look at us.

JS: OK, your trademark wiggle—is that natural, or can you teach someone else to do it?

AW: Part natural, like 50-50. I've done that since college.

JS: Where are winters worse, here or Chicago?

AW: Chicago. It's colder, windier. More brutally cold.

JS: Ever bet Michael Jordan in anything?

AW: [Laughs.] Oh, yeah, everything you can bet on, except basketball.

JS: So who wins?

AW: He's up right now.

JS: One person you'd most like to play one-on-one?

AW: Magic Johnson.

JS: How about someone who's not necessarily a basketball player?

AW: George W. Bush.

JS: Best perk of being an NBA star?

AW: Notoriety, I think. Getting noticed no matter where you go.

JS: Worst fan encounter?

AW: I think Philly has the worst fans. There's this one guy who sits there and looks at your bio and takes something off that. It's brutal.

JS: Is Michael Jordan mortal?

AW: Yes.

JS: Is Shaq a cocky bastard for having that Superman tattoo on his arm?

AW: [Laughs.] Nah. He deserves it.

JS: Favorite Larry Bird encounter?

AW: Back in '96, coming out of school, I had an opportunity when I came to work out with the team, before they drafted me, to have some one-on-one time with him. That was the best.

JS: Rate the FleetCenter as an arena, on a scale from 1 to 10—1 being poor, 10 being perfection.

AW: Probably a 7.

JS: Best and worst things about it?

AW: The worst thing is it's always cold. The best thing is that the fans are right on you, all around.

JS: Favorite FleetCenter snack?

AW: The soup.

JS: Sport you're best at, after basketball?

AW: Baseball.

JS: Best-dressed player in the NBA?

AW: Me.

JS: One word that describes what it means to you to be a Celtic?

AW: I'd have to say "pride." Definitely.

JS: Last question: Is it OK to wear white after Labor Day?

AW: No, it's not OK.

JS: But you do it all the time!

AW: No I don't.

JS: Your uniforms!

AW: [Laughs.] Awww, that doesn't count.

JS: OK, Kansas retired your number, 34. Give me a prediction when the Celtics will retire it.

Paul Pierce: Wow, OK. This is 2003. I figure I'll probably play another six or seven years. Let's say 10 years from today.

JS: What in Christ's name does "Rock Chalk Jayhawk!" {the Kansas cheer} mean?

PP: [Laughs.] I have absolutely no idea, but I say it too.

JS: So who has more style, you or Antoine?

PP: I think I've got a little more style. I think I take a little more chances.

JS: California to Kansas. That must've been a jolt.

PP: Oh, man, it was definitely a culture shock. I was used to bright lights, big city, and in Kansas, I had to get used to wheat fields and cows.

JS: OK, doesn't Coach O'Brien look a little bit like the leprechaun on the Celtics logo?

PP: [Laughs.] If he smoked a pipe and had a hat...

JS: One person you'd most like to play one-on-one?

PP: Jennifer Lopez. Ben Affleck's gonna get mad at me.

JS: Finish this thought: Big feet, big...

PP: Big hands.

JS: Worst line from a civilian about your height?

PP: Probably just, "Gosh, you're tall."

JS: Michael Jordan. Is he mortal?

PP: No. He's immortal.

JS: Is Shaq a cocky SOB for having that Superman tattoo?

PP: No, I think it fits him. He could act ally play that role in the movie.

JS: Strangest fan encounter?

PP: Probably in Toronto, where there wa guy dressed in a Spiderman outfit with jersey on top of it, running around eve where and crawling all over the place.

JS: Rate the FleetCenter as an arena on a sca of 1 to 10—1 being poor, 10 being perfection.

PP: It's about a 9.

JS: Best and worst things about it?

PP: Worst is probably the soup....

JS: That's so funny. Antoine said the soup w his favorite FleetCenter snack.

PP: The soup's bad. But the best thi about it is the crowd, and the noise.

JS: Favorite FleetCenter snack?

PP: I don't know if it's a snack, but I like grilled chicken.

JS: Favorite video basketball game?

PP: Inside Drive 2003.

JS: Best-dressed player in the NBA?

PP: Probably Michael Jordan.

JS: One word that sums up how you feel abou being a Celtic?

PP: "Honored." It's a great honor.

JS: Best perk of being an NBA star?

PP: We can get in free to the best nigh clubs.

JS: Sport you're best at, after basketball?

PP: Tennis.

JS: OK, last question: You're not supposed to wear white after Labor Day. Is it ever OK?

PP: I don't know. I've never heard that.

LIVING THE good life FOR LESS

A BARGAIN-HUNTER'S GUIDE TO BOSTON

If there's one thing certain in the economy now, it's uncertainty. It's hard to know what's coming next—in the stock market, the job market or the economy as a whole.

Whatever the economic future holds, it can't hurt to have a little more cash. Whether you plan to increase your rainy-day savings fund, boost your retirement savings, save for a dream vacation or pay credit-card debt, a little more money can come in handy. There's just one problem: It's not always easy to get your employer to give you a substantial raise or bonus, especially in an uncertain economy.

But there's some good news: You can give yourself a raise—by finding ways to spend less. Find a way to spend a dollar less, and it's as good as earning an extra dollar in salary— even better in fact, since you don't have to pay taxes on it.

The Museum of Science

I learned about the joy of spending less from personal experience. For most of my career I worked at a magazine that, at the time, was based in Boston. Two years ago, during a round of cutbacks, I was laid off from the Internet division of that company, and I faced a key career dilemma. Would I have to move to New York, where most of the magazine industry is based—and leave Boston, a city I love? Would I have to find something else to do? Or could I create my own job as a freelance journalist?

I decided to try self-employment. And while I drummed up business, I also focused on the side of the money equation I could control: costs. I knew cutting my overhead upped my chances of success. I started tracking every dollar I spent and looking for ways to spend less. I even kept track of every way I found to save.

Two years later, I'm happy to say that I have indeed succeeded as a freelance writer and editor. True, I don't earn as much as I used to, but I also don't spend as much. I love my work—and self-employment has its perks (for example, my work life almost never resembles a Dilbert cartoon). Along the way I've discovered that there are all kinds of painless ways to save money. Here are some strategies you can try to live the good life for less, even in an expensive city like Boston:

THINK ZIPCAR. I don't often express affection for commercial enterprises, but I have to tell the truth: I love Zipcar. When I became self-employed, I was afraid I'd have to buy a car for the first time in years so I could get to meetings and appointments. Instead, I joined Zipcar, the Cambridge-based company that allows members to rent cars by the hour, over the Internet.

Everyone's lifestyle is different, of course. But if you use a car only occasionally—primarily for short, several-hour trips—consider looking into Zipcar. The cost of owning a car in Boston can be high. In a recent article in the Boston Globe, one reporter estimated his car costs (lease, insurance and so on) to be nearly $700 per month, which works out to more than $8,000 per year. Ouch.

Zipcars are parked in set locations around Boston, Brookline, Cambridge and Somerville: You reserve a specific car, pick it up at its parking spot, and return it to that spot. You generally pay both by the hour and the mile for cars, and gas and insurance are included in the fee. For example, one car I use costs $6/hour, plus 40 cents a mile, up to a maximum daily rate.

Here's how my numbers compare. I end up supplementing Zipcar with the T and some car rentals (for longer periods, rentals often make more sense), some bus tickets to the Cape and some cab rides when I get rushed. Including those expenses, I estimate that my total 2002 local and regional transportation costs were about $2,800 or less, with about $1,125 in Zipcar usage. That's a far cry from $8,000 a year—and, in my case, the number includes everything from subway tokens to highway tolls and parking meters. That's why I love Zipcar. (I should note that my transportation costs may not be typical. I don't have a daily commute, and I love to walk just for the exercise.)

GET FREE DRUGSTORE PRODUCTS. I'm no fan of most consumer-products rebate programs; all too often they're too much work for too little payoff. But the Walgreens EasySaver rebate program lives up to its name. Generally, there are several toiletry items every month that you can try for free after the rebate, and a number of others that have a smaller rebate. Just save the receipts and send in one form at the end of the month to receive one combined refund. Look for the little EasySaver catalog in Walgreens; if you don't see it, the catalog is also available at www.walgreens.com.

STOCK UP DURING SALES. This strategy is really easy, but it's surprisingly effective at yielding savings, and many people don't do it. Simply flip through the ad circulars in your Sunday paper and those from local grocery stores. Then buy things when they're on sale—and, for non-perishable items, buy a little bit more than you normally would, to last you until the next sale. (Don't go overboard, particularly if, like me, you live in a compact urban space. You do not want to spend your life navigating around six dozen rolls of paper towels just to save a few dollars.) Things go on sale all the time. You just need to stock up a little, especially if you don't have strong brand loyalties.

Sound simple? It is. And it adds up. I estimate that, with a one-person household, I saved more than $400 in 2002, just by buying more groceries and household items on sale rather than on impulse.

DISCOVER COUPONS. I know, I know. Clipping coupons sounds like something for Ozzie and Harriet, not a sophisticated urbanite like you. Right? Maybe not. For one thing, today's coupons aren't just for gelatin and sugary cereals; in recent months, I've used coupons for items like fairly-traded coffee, organic soy milk and several soy-based meat substitutes. Try looking through the coupon supplements that typically come with a Sunday paper to see if any are for products you use.

As it turns out, many millionaires clip food coupons. That was a surprising finding made by Dr. Thomas J. Stanley, author of The Millionaire Mind, who researched the lifestyles and characteristics of American millionaires. According to Stanley, millionaires tend to have a frugal mind-set that emphasizes the future—and if you calculate the savings from coupons over time and invest them, they add up.

millionaires tend to have a frugal mind-set that emphasizes the future.

I am no millionaire, but I do know that even in my one-person household, coupons add up. In 2002 my net savings from coupons on food and household items was about $23 per month, plus an additional $16 per month in coupon savings on other items, from books to ice cream cones. That works out to yearly savings of more than $465. And I'm not a coupon fanatic; I do some of my shopping at Trader Joe's and the Harvest Co-op, where mass-market coupons apply to fewer products.

Can't figure out how to keep track of coupons effectively? Consider some type of coupon organizer, available at supermarkets and some office-supply stores. If you shop spontaneously, at unpredictable times—as some urban professionals do—you may want to carry the coupon organizer in a bag, knapsack, briefcase or purse. Also, keep your eye out for "triple coupons" in supermarket circulars; while Stop & Shop and Shaw's double most coupons that are less than $1, tripled coupons can yield even more significant savings. Another way to maximize savings: Use a coupon when the product is on sale.

ENJOY A MUSEUM—at little or no cost. Here's a great deal. Libraries in a number of area communities, including Boston, Cambridge, Brookline, Somerville and Watertown, loan museum passes that offer free or discounted admission to residents of the city or town. Programs vary, so ask your local librarian for details. For example, if you have a valid Boston Public Library card, almost every branch of the Boston Public Library has free passes that you can reserve for the Museum of Science, the Museum of Fine Arts and, during the school year, the New England Aquarium. BPL branches also have passes for very discounted admission to the Children's Museum, and some local branches may have passes for other attractions, such as the Franklin Park Zoo. What's more, some of the passes are good for up to four people.

In addition, some museums offer free admission at certain times. The Institute of Contemporary Art has free admission on Thursday evenings after 5; the museum closes at 9 that evening. The Harvard University Art Museums—the Fogg, the Busch-Reisinger and the Arthur M. Sackler Museum—offer free admission on Saturday mornings from 10 to noon; also, admission to those museums is free to holders of Cambridge Public Library cards. The Museum of Fine Arts asks for a voluntary contribution on Wednesdays from 4 to 9:45pm. And the Museum of Afro American History has no admission charge at all.

USHER—and see the show for free. High cost of theater tickets got you down? Both the Huntington Theatre Company and Blue Man Group at the Charles Playhouse use volunteer ushers. For more information, visit the Huntington Web site, at www.bu.edu/huntington (volunteer opportunities are listed under "About the Huntington") or call about Blue Man Group at the Charles Playhouse, 617-426-6912.

ATTEND A FREE CONCERT. The New England Conservatory of Music offers about 600 free concerts a year, from jazz to chamber music to symphonic music to large chorale pieces. Learn more about it at www.newengland conservatory. edu ; click on "Concert Calendar." You can also call 617-585-1122. One big event coming up is a festival from March 9 through 12 called "Charlie Parker and the Teachers of His Dreams."

The Boston Symphony Orchestra also offers free concerts through its Community Chamber Concert series, in which BSO members perform in locations in and around Boston. An upcoming BSO Community Chamber Concert is scheduled at St. Catherine's Cathedral in Somerville on March 23. Reservations are required for Community Chamber Concerts. For more information, call 617-638-9300.

STRETCH YOUR DINING-OUT DOLLARS. Love to eat out but want to do it more often than your budget allows? Here's a thrifty strategy I learned recently from my friend Amy. She calls it "pre-eating." Amy realized that much of the fun of eating out is being with people you care about, trying interesting food and just being out. So she's adopted a money-saving strategy that works like this: Eat a sandwich (or some other light meal) around dinner time. Then go out later with a friend or loved one for an appetizer and a drink, or dessert and coffee. It's most of the fun, at significantly less cost than a full meal. Key to this approach is waiting until a restaurant is no longer full or at its peak dinner hour; otherwise, you risk bad karma by annoying waiters and waitresses.

TRY A WINE TASTING. Here's a fun way to educate yourself about wine. A number of local stores offer regular free wine tastings, among them the following: Allston/ Brighton: Brookline Liquor Mart, 1354 Commonwealth Ave., Sat. 1-5pm, 617-734-7700; Marty's, 193 Harvard Ave., 2-5pm almost every Sat., 617-782-3250. Boston and Brookline: Best Cellars, 1327 Beacon St. in Coolidge Corner in Brookline, 617-232-4100, and 745 Boylston St. in Boston, 617-266-2900. In both locations, tastings featuring one wine per night, Mon. through Fri., 5-8 pm, and larger tasting events Sat., 2-4pm. Cambridge: Mall Discount Liquors, 202 Alewife Brook Pkwy., Sat., 2-6pm, 617-864-7171. Newton: Lower Falls Wine Co., 2366 Washington St., Newton Lower Falls, Sat., 12-4pm, 617-332-3000; Marty's, 675 Washington St., Newtonville, Sat., 3-5pm, 617-332-1230. iB

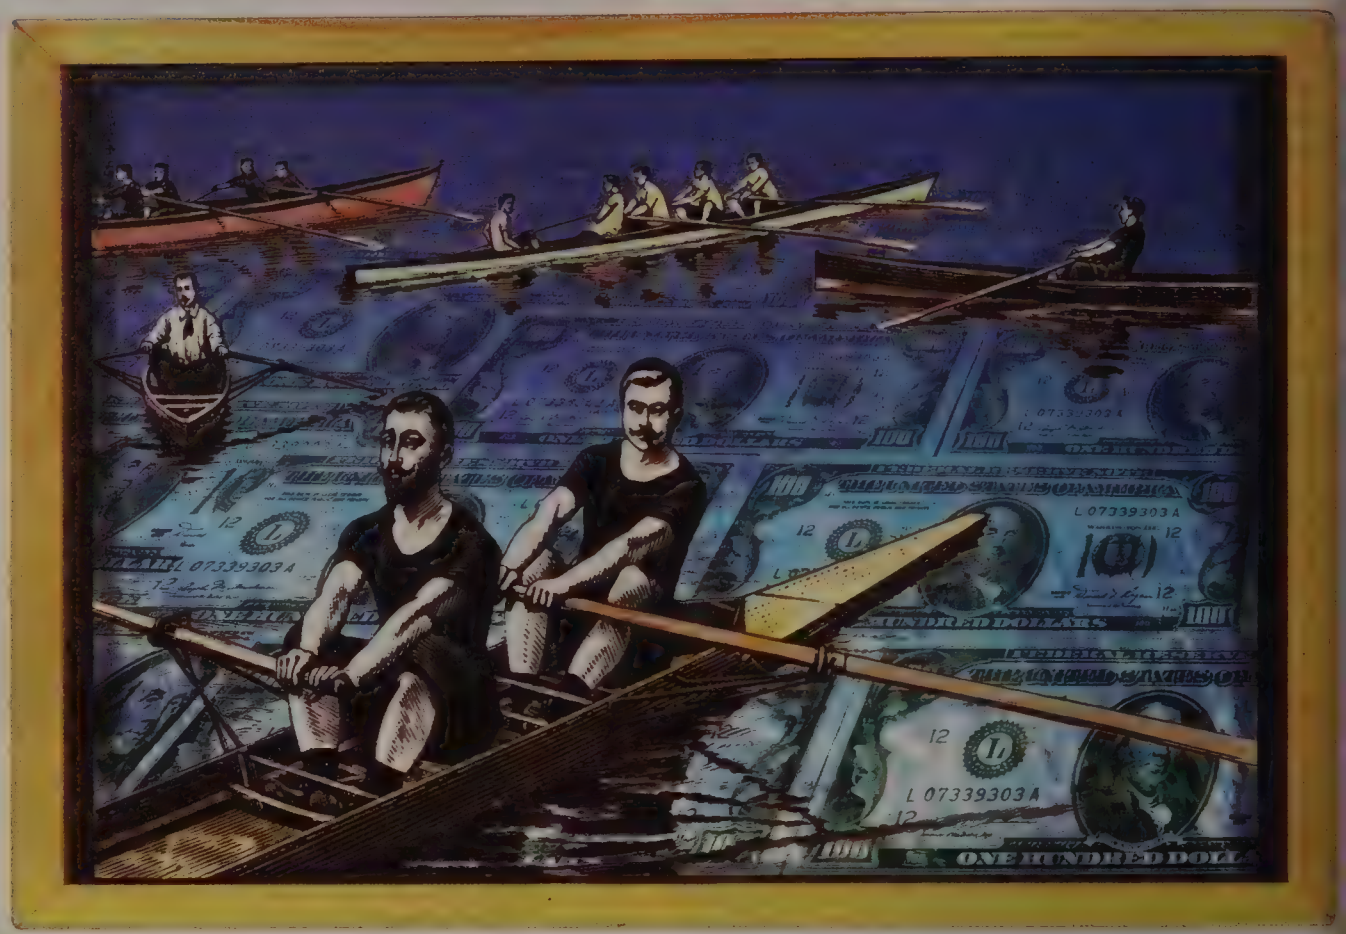
FOR A HEALTHIER FINANCIAL FUTURE

HOW SHOULD YOU MANAGE YOUR MONEY IN AN UNCERTAIN ECONOMY? FINANCIAL GURUS OFFER ADVICE.

BY KATE O'SULLIVAN



So it's not 1999 anymore, and your chances of becoming an instant millionaire on the stock market are slim. But that's OK, say Boston's financial planners and market-watchers. The experts say you shouldn't be counting on one big win anyway. Even with short-term worries about the economy and the possibility of war with Iraq, you should have a financial plan and stick to it. Think about retirement—even though it may be many years away—and plan for that instead of hoping for a big score. We got some practical advice from some of Boston's top personal finance professionals.

"You really want to think big picture and long term. Think about what your goals and dreams are and think about creating a plan to get there. People in their 30s and 40s have a long time horizon. They don't need to take unnecessary risks, like looking for the next hot fund or rotating around in different sectors or having a portfolio that's not diversified. They really ought to be deciding what their goals are, and building a portfolio around that."
—Susan Burns, a certified financial planner, president of the Financial Planning Association of Massachusetts, and president and founder of Snug Harbor Financial Planning Inc. in Marshfield

"We've been advising people to stay short—look for bonds that are three or four or five years in terms of maturity. There's no point in locking in a 15-year bond because interest rates will have moved up by that time. You're better off having a shorter bond. If you're a young person, you have all the time in the world to ride out the market. But I'd always have a little piece of my portfolio in bonds. It's kind of your ballast to windward."
—David Pendergast, senior vice president in the private clients group at Corby Capital Markets, a Boston-based fixed-income investment firm

"We've done some international investing, but we really believe that the U.S. economy is the best, the strongest, and you get more information here than anywhere else. There are people who will say you should have some international, some bonds, some emerging markets stocks, some real estate, some of [illegible] but the success stories of this world are of [illegible] have concentrated. Of course, the danger [illegible] wrong, you suffer more."
[illegible], vice chairman of North American Management Corporation, a global investment advisory firm based in Boston

"Buy-and-hold is dead. There was a time when you could find a good company, buy the stock, and sleep well at night knowing that you would make money someday. It's much harder to do that today because the markets are so violent…an astute investor needs to pay more attention than he used to because things are happening faster. You may have to cut and run when you're wrong."
—Shawn Kravetz, president of Esplanade Capital LLC, a Boston-based hedge fund

"Communicate with your manager. Most people talk to their hairdresser or their mechanic more often than they talk to the person who can affect their financial future. I hear from people, 'I haven't opened my statement in four months.' Even if you manage your money independently, communicate with someone. Watch your stuff. And open your statements!"
—Christopher P. Lorenz, president and chief investment officer of Pine Capital LLC, an investment management services firm in Boston

"I've talked to some people who don't have any money saved and want to get right into the stock market. First you should have an emergency fund, usually about three to six months' worth of monthly expenses. Once you have that you can start looking at investing."
—Rick Fingerman, a certified financial planner with Financial Planning Solutions in Medford and chairman of the board of the Financial Planning Association of Massachusetts

"I've definitely seen people moving either to money market funds or to bonds. You have to be careful not to go completely overboard, though, because you need to have some cash available to invest. There will be investment opportunities as the economy picks up. Financial stocks, consumer discretionary stocks, software companies, publishing and media, and property and casualty companies are some of the groups that our research department thinks will be most likely to benefit."
—Bruce R. Balter, senior vice president, Salomon Smith Barney

"Look at your portfolio every 90 days and decide whether you're over-concentrated in a stock. It's hard to sell a stock if it's been good to you, but sometimes you have to do it. You should re-evaluate your portfolio every quarter and you should do it with help, whether it's with a financial advisor, a tax person, or a friend. Because if it's your money, you can get too close to it. It's just like your health—you really want an outside opinion."
—Daniel Joyce, president of Moors and Cabot Inc., a hundred-year-old Boston-based investment services firm

"Do financial planning. All that means is review your goals regularly and write them down. Goals can be things like, 'I want to pay off my credit card in a year,' or 'I want to have a cash reserve, so I need to start saving $200 a month.' You need to very specifically write down what you need to do every month to reach that goal. Being patient is the key to financial success, both in planning and in investing."
—Maureen Igoe, an Arlington-based financial advisor with American Express Financial Advisors Inc. and personal finance instructor for the Boston Center for Adult Education and Brookline Adult and Community Education

"The worst financial decision I think people make is to go out and run up a credit card balance, just pay off the minimum each month, and then go get another card and do it all over again. Before they know it, they've got twenty or twenty-five thousand dollars worth of credit card debt. The interest costs on it in many cases are higher than they'd pay if they had an equity line."
—Robert Murphy, professor of economics at Boston College ■

HOW EXPENSIVE IS BOSTON, REALLY? CHECK OUR CHART.

BY JESSICA IREDALE

By now you know that living in Boston ain't cheap. According to the Places Rated Almanac, our glorious city's the fifth most expensive in the U.S. But could another city tempt you away? And just how do Boston's daily expenses compare with those of other U.S. cities? We researched costs in Boston and four other cities representing varied rungs on the cost-of-living ladder, to find out. If Boston's housing costs have got you down, remember that no U.S. city's more expensive than New York. A move to the Big Apple will cost you, but that's the price you pay to live in the center of the Western world. You could halve your rent, however, by decamping to Austin, Texas. It boasts a kinder climate, a hot music scene and cozy-yet-urban feel. But if you can't imagine leaving New England and love the outdoors, Portland, Maine, has a respectable cultural scene and the landscape to satisfy your rugged side (plus you can still root for the Pats). On the other hand, this year's brutal winter may make Tampa's average year-round 72 degrees (and lower cost of living) look tempting. Our chart shows the average prices that we computed for everyday commodities in each city.

IRISH O'Breakfast

BEGIN THE DAY THE IRISH WAY, WITH BANGERS, RASHERS AND BLACK PUDDING

BY JULIE SHORT PHOTOGRAPH BY BERTA DANIELS

At

8am on a Sunday morning, business at the Green Briar is bustling. Much of the city's Irish population has converged upon this Brighton pub to catch the live telecast of Irish football (or soccer, as we Americans call it). Despite the fact that there's no beer to be had until noon (as local liquor laws dictate), the crowd is rambunctious. Waiters scurry back and forth balancing platters of food as footie fans cheer on their favorite team. Given the hour, coffee is the drink of choice, and the fare on almost every table is the same: traditional Irish breakfast.

It must be said that the Irish—never known for their haute cuisine—do breakfast right. It wouldn't be Sunday morning in Ireland without a home-cooked meal of Irish bangers (sausage), rashers (bacon), black and white pudding (meat patties), fried tomatoes, eggs, homefries (french fries), baked beans and toast. "Yeah, it's heavy in cholesterol and a bit on the greasy side," says Joe Fenton, manager of the Green Briar, which serves as many as 200 Irish breakfast platters on a game day during football season (March to September). "But once you've tasted Irish meat, you'll never want American again." Fenton imports his sausage "from the island" and serves Bachelors baked beans, another Irish import. "It has to be authentic," he says, "or else all the Irish would go someplace else."

There's truth to that. More than 30 pubs around the city offer Irish breakfast of some sort, but it's attention to detail that makes certain pubs stand out. The french fries, for example, should be thick-cut, says Fenton. "And some places don't offer baked beans or only serve one sausage, not two."

If that sounds awfully nitpicky, it is. Irish transplants want the breakfast they grew up with. "Every Sunday morning, my mum would prepare a big breakfast," says Dublin native Orlaith Carson, a waitress at the Green Briar. "She made it for my five brothers, who'd all wake up with hangovers." Ah, yes, did we mention the medicinal benefits of an Irish breakfast? "It's all the kinds of foods you crave," adds Carson.

Fenton, meanwhile, has brought a heaping plate of Irish breakfast to the wooden booth where I am seated. It's a work of art. A small crock of baked beans with brown sugar and molasses forms the centerpiece. I make my way around clockwise, beginning with the sausage. It tastes smoky, and the texture reminds me more of a hot dog than a link of Jimmy Dean. Next is a thick slice of fried tomato, soft and succulent. Two slices of toasted brown bread rest on the plate's rim. Traditionally, the Irish slather their bread with sweet butter and preserves, but here a plastic packet of State Brand butter will have to suffice. My eggs come scrambled, but most kitchens, including the Green Briar's, will fry them for you if that's your preference. The fries, thick-cut as promised, are crispy on the outside and fluffy inside. The rashers, fried in a dollop of butter, are tender and taste more like Canadian bacon, or fried ham, than the crispy bacon Americans are used to.

The wild card, which I've been avoiding until last, is the two varieties of "pudding." Forget any notion you have of a creamy dessert. White pudding consists of processed meat mixed with oats, onion and seasoning. Black pudding is similar but gets its name from the addition of lamb's or pig's blood to the mixture. The patties are fried with a crispy exterior and a chewy, more gristly interior. My companions compare Irish pudding to Philadelphia scrapple. Once you get beyond the idea of blood as an ingredient, it's not half bad. "It kind of helps if you grew up with it," says Fenton, whose parents used to make their own pudding on their farm in rural Connemara, Ireland. I wash it down with a mug of milky Irish tea.

It's a meal and a half. In Ireland, they wouldn't eat another meal until dinnertime at 4pm, Carson says. Myself, I probably won't eat for days. But there's no reason I couldn't have a pint or two of Guinness come noon. iB

A SLICE OF IRELAND...ON A PLATTER

Not everyone who indulges in Irish breakfast hails from the Emerald Isle—at the Green Briar, nine out of 10 patrons are Irish, but "Americans love it too," says manager Joe Fenton. If you'd like to indulge, here's a list of some pubs around the city that offer the meal.

celebrate spring

Spring is a time to celebrate being able to frolic in the great outdoors. Light, feminine fabrics will make you feel as free as the wind at your back while you while away the hours on the Cape or the Common. Sundresses as thin as tissue paper and colorful bead-ed embellishments are the season's must-haves. Shirts that tie at each shoulder or around the waist to reveal a more relaxed cut with a retro '70s feel are also a big hit. Smile and rejoice in white cotton dresses, skirts and tops that say "spring is here." Get comfortable in a short skirt paired with a tank top with barely there straps. These looks will take you from a backyard bar-becue to a casual week-end on the Vineyard. Choose anything you like just be sure you can really move in it. These are clothes you can live in.

MANY-FLAVORED BRAHMINS

Jessica Shattuck's first novel, The Hazards of Good Breeding, follows an upper-middle-class family's loneliness and its surprising connections.

"What if you're in the middle of your subject and you can see it in more ways than one?" 21-year-old Caroline asks the filmmaker who is working on a documentary about her seemingly privileged family. Seeing her characters in various, textured ways is exactly the skill Jessica Shattuck brings to this absorbing novel. Jack Dunlap's wife, Faith, has had a breakdown and become distant from her family. Caroline, their daughter, is herself drifting a bit after returning home from college, and her brother, 10-year-old Eliot, has lived in a lonely fantasy world since his babysitter, Rosita, left. Decent but uptight Jack is still living in the family's stiffly uncomfortable house west of Boston. The wonderfully named Rock, a bumbling, post-hippie friend of Caroline, hangs around the scene, opening things up with his oafish naivete. The plot slow-boils to a surprising conclusion, but it's Shattuck's ongoing rich depiction of each character's very different inner world, combined with her ability to take a sharp, amused, detached view of their attitudes and foibles that makes Hazards so pleasing. Shattuck has also published in The New Yorker.

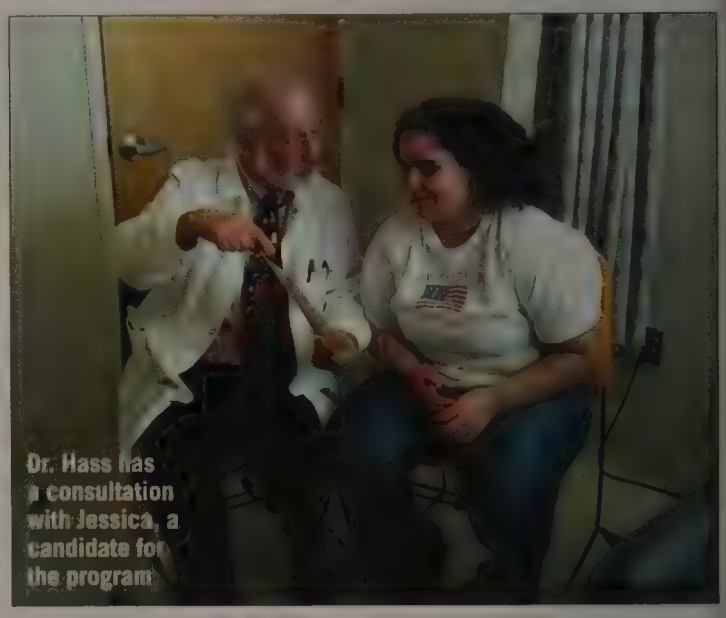
IN YOUR WINDOW'S FACE

Innuwindow, at 595 Worcester Road, Route 9, Natick (888-881-9922 and 508-650-9922) sells ready-made and custom shades, curtains, colorful valences, shutters and some furniture.

If you think shades and blinds are sort of utilitarian, yank your attitude-adjustment cord. Innuwindow carries the ever more airy, sophisticated and versatile Hunter Douglas collection, which includes sheer shades with blinds inside that let in poetic light till shut-eye time. Shades slice vertically or horizontally; the latter can include a feature that divides the top and bottom to create a café-curtain effect. Demand technological ease? There's even a remote-controlled model. Thermalite shades diffuse the light attractively. Or try shutters—always high-class, now more durable. Roman shades beautifully display their fabric pattern. And Innuwindow is a gold mine for fabrics, including those from Stroheim & Romann and Kravet. Curtains, ready-made or custom, are dreamy and silky like slender ballgowns, with some delicately embroidered. Duvet covers of similar aristocratic snazz, with sheets to match, are princess-class, of silk-like cotton. Innuwindow's walls are bedecked with merry valances—those little, allusive almost-curtains that dance above an otherwise-naked window, bringing color and appeal. Beyond window treatments, big iron beds (some canopy-ready) and cozy but substantial sofas topped with embroidered pillows fill this pleasant store. And customer service is excellent.

WAIT WEIGHT! IT'S NOT TOO LATE

With obesity on the rise among children and teenagers, a multi-pronged pilot program called WIN (Weight Initiative Now) begins at the South End Community Health Center in March. WIN accommodates 40 children ages 8-13. Call 617-425-2000.



Dr. Hass has a consultation with Jessica, a candidate for the program

The setting is salubrious, airy and cheery, and the patients chat among themselves and with the staff. However, here at the South End Community Health Center, the rising epidemic of obesity among children and teenagers is a serious concern. Twenty-five percent of Massachusetts students in grades 9-12 are overweight or obese, and type-II diabetes, formerly a problem of the middle-aged, is on the rise in this group. It's hard for these kids, bombarded with Britney-bellied role models, to feel good about themselves, especially if they're teased and ostracized. Many cultural demons contribute: waning school sports programs, poverty, fractured family time, monster-sized servings of fast foods, and the sedentary habit of TV watching. Hoping to counteract those influences, WIN will bring 40 kids into nutritional counseling with Lela Silverstein, who will teach about healthy eating. Activities include food-shopping field trips and cooking demos along with a fun, gender-specific hip-hop exercise class. Counseling will be available as well for the inevitable corollary emotional burdens. Spearheading WIN is pediatrician Gerald Hass, who has treated generations of the clinic's patients and will bring his signature spritely idealism and comforting warmth to the venture.

Upscale Squared

Mary-Catherine Deibel and Deborah Hughes have done it again with UpStairs on the Square

BY J. CHARLES MOKRISKI • PHOTOGRAPHS BY BERTA A. DANIELS

This place is magical. Two restaurants in one, UpStairs on the Square consists of an upscale, pink fantasyland on the third floor, and a slightly less flamboyant, more reasonably priced comfort food haven on the second. In a remarkable accomplishment, owners Mary-Catherine Deibel and Deborah Hughes have managed to transport intact the joie de vivre of their old UpStairs at the Pudding following its unceremonious eviction from its former home by a space-hungry university. The new digs, on Winthrop Street across from the House of Blues, are in a Harvardian brick building dating from 1906. Even though it lacks the Hasty Pudding Club cachet, the new home is even more engaging than the old.

The upstairs dining room, the Soirée Room, stands out with its over-the-top décor designed, like the rest of the restaurant, by Hughes herself. Handpainted pink and gold walls—someone said the art is not on the walls; it is the walls—conduct a genteel rivalry with tables dressed in pink linens. Deibel says the pink color scheme, reflected in the mirrored ceiling, bathes the room in a mellow light that makes everyone look better. A white wood-paneled wall divides the room into two parts, with a gas-fired fireplace and dark marble mantel at each end. Snake-necked art deco sconces, gilt-framed mirrors, Victorian gray-blue banquettes with extravagant curves and rococo gold-trimmed chairs with red upholstered seats create an eclectically festive ambiance. Elegant tableware, including bone-handled steak knives and beautiful yet serviceable Spiegel stemware, adorns the tables. The second-floor dining venue, the Monday Club Bar, is also attractive, dominated by a long bar backed by a huge Belle Epoque framed mirror. The bar adjoins a skylighted porch with zebra-patterned carpet, red and pink Chinese screens and bright red walls.

Deibel and Hughes have assembled a cast of headliners at the new UpStairs: chef Amanda Lydon, formerly of Truc and Metro; general manager Lorenzo Savona, former co-owner and sommelier at Les Zygomates; and Monday Bar chef Susan Regis, who trained and worked alongside Lydia Shire at Biba.

No sooner did we sit down in the Soirée Room than a parade of incredible treats commenced. First, a tiny tureen of Jerusalem artichoke soup with chopped chives and buttery brioche croutons teased and tantalized—a subtle, light but intensely flavorful brew with a hint of sweetness. A second amuse gueule—chicken mousse on brioche toast—transported us with its creamy, ethereal lightness and sweet, tangy kumquat marmalade. Bread from Cambridge's Hi-Rise Bread Company—crisp-crusted Polka loaves—was served with soft butter (though after my visit, UpStairs on the Square began baking its bread in-house).

The wine list is pricey (with all but one red priced at more than $30 a bottle), but delivers value. We chose a well-structured Calabrian red, the 1990 Ippolito Ciro Rosso Riserva Colli del Mancuso, to accompany meat dishes and found it first-rate. Savona explained that its good structure and high acid level were a product of the cool breezes off the Ionian Sea, making it less ponderous than many southern Italian reds.

Among the first courses, the Duxbury oyster stew ($13) was splendid. Served in a small, almost diminutive bowl with a cute white china cloche to keep in the heat, the stew's remarkably full, intense oyster flavor stood out. When I remarked on that flavor to chef Lydon in a brief phone call, she disclosed that it resulted from plopping fresh oysters into shallots, butter, cream, minced parsley and chives only moments after they were shucked, a trick taught by food legend M.F.K. Fisher. A lighter appetizer, haricots verts with hazelnut vinaigrette and field mache ($10), brought bright green beans, perfectly al dente, served with refreshing lambs lettuce and a tangy vinaigrette, with a garnish of shallots and cashews.

The Soirée Room's main courses included a meaty, well-marbled veal chop ($32) accompanied by fried baby artichokes. The chop was thick, rare and juicy, with just enough fat to give it richness. The artichokes provided a delightful counterpoint, lightly breaded and fried to a crisp but delicate turn. With polenta promised as the starch, I re quested that it be served on the side t avoid the abominable layering trend en demic in Boston chefdom—and I wa glad I did. Our polenta arrived in a smal casserole—a luscious, soft but formed sweet-starchy treat, the best polenta I'v ever tasted. Filet of beef tenderloin ($29 yielded an oversized piece of fork-tende beef, with an aromatic but not fiery dust ing of fresh ground pepper. Slightl caramelized roast potato wedges and ragout of woodsy wild mushrooms pro vided excellent accompaniments, bu they were overshadowed by a succulen golubka of broad spinach leaves stuffed with black truffle panna cotta.

As exquisite as the Soirée Room's offerings were, the aggressive prices dictate that this is a spot to save for special occasions. Fortunately the down-to-earth cuisine in the Monday Bar offers a less pricey alternative. Incredibly, a bowl of superb clam chowder with firm potato cubes, chopped celery, carrots, onions, small morsels of meaty pancetta, and tender morsels of clams in a light cream broth flecked with freshly chopped parsley, is only $5. Only the soggy oyster crackers—I wondered why were they not served separately—detracted from the dish. For a main course I could not pass up the chicken fricassee ($13), a dish I'd not encountered since I left home, where it was one of my Dad's comfort food specialties. Here it arrived steaming hot from the kitchen, essentially a chicken pot pie, with white and dark chicken, carrots, potatoes, mushrooms, muted garlic and chopped chives, served in a white ramekin. Two buttery biscuits crowned this humble yet exalted preparation.

Filet of beef tenderloin with ragout of wild mushrooms and black truffle panna cotta.

Desserts in both dining rooms were pricey, starting at $8. The chocolate soufflé cake ($10), served with an intriguingly delicious Earl Grey prune ice cream—made on premises like all of UpStairs' ice creams—was at once light and moist, enhanced with streaks of dark chocolate sauce. Equally rich was the pain perdu with caramelized apples ($9). This bread pudding (in our house, pain perdu, or lost bread, describes French toast) was moist, not dry like too many bread puddings, and made with juicy apples. A huge portion, it could have served as a dessert for two.

Service was first-rate. Our cover was blown one evening when Savona, whose roots are in Connecticut like my own, recognized me. On my subsequent visit, to the Monday Bar, I believe I went unrecognized but received the same excellent service.

UpStairs on the Square is an estimable eating establishment. When I called around Valentine's Day to try to make a reservation for a follow-up visit, I was told that the restaurant was "fully committed." Deibel and Hughes have themselves another winner in this spot. Indeed, fully committed is a state in which UpStairs on the Square will find itself more often than not. iB

Still a Hot Todd-y?

English spoken everywhere...Greens for guys...Prix-fixe pondered...

BY CAROLYN FAYE FOX

Todd English may be one of the founding fathers—or uncles, or cousins—of the Boston celebrity chef family, but his glitzy big-city image would hardly seem to be Yankee Magazine's cup of tea. Nonetheless, he's highlighted in the March issue of the magazine better known for featuring practical gardening advice or the comparative merits of seaside lobster rolls. Will Yankee's readers be kicking up their sensibly shod heels when they read that English is opening yet another Olives in Tokyo, that he's developing two more television shows, would like to open a culinary school, etc.? Will anybody?

Here's the logical next step: Todd English as a featured model in the L.L. Bean catalog, decked out in khakis and flannel, cooking up vittles in a trusty enamel skillet for his camouflage-clad camping buddies and their rambunctious Labrador retrievers. Then again, maybe not.

And maybe it's not important, but we think you should know about the most manly salad we've ever seen on a menu. If you're a swaggering stud with a craving for curry, cruise over to the new Curry Leaf in Natick and order the Curry Leaf salad, described as chicken tandoori, lemon, peppers, tomatoes and chickpeas "served on a bed of masculine lettuce." No frilly frisee here, thank you very much. Seriously, though, even though this new Indian restaurant is sited in a strip mall on Route 9 near a Christmas Tree Shop, it marks a bright spot in the sparse Metrowest dining scene. That's because Curry Leaf is the latest project from Shikha and Vinod Kapoor, owners of the Bombay Club and other Indian restaurants. They serve up terrific vegetarian samosas, several goat meat options and an intriguing dish that features "a fully resplendent chicken," whatever that is.

SECOND COURSE

The dinner is in the details: The prix fixe, an increasingly popular offering in area restaurants, is, of course, a complete dinner served at a set price. Now, it may not be your idea of complete—sometimes it's three courses that don't include dessert, and usually wine and/or coffee aren't included—but you should also pay attention to other possible conditions of the deal. For example, Craigie Street Bistrot, which first offered a $29 "neighborhood menu" on Sundays, Wednesdays and Thursdays, to encourage the locals to dine out on slower nights, has extended the menu to Fridays and Saturdays...but only after nine o'clock, to increase business later into the most popular evenings.

Todd English plans to open yet another Olives in Tokyo and is developing two more television shows. What's next for this talented chef?

In the North End, Monica's is wrapping up a two-month promotional prix fixe menu whose restrictions required a full paragraph of explanation in a press release: Sunday through Thursday only. The price is per person, and the dinner may not be split "amongst multiple diners." No substitutions are allowed, and don't even think about combining prix fixe items with regular menu items. Monica's logo depicts a benevolently smiling nun, but that's only if you eat by the rules.

Out in Newton, Lumiere introduced its prix fixe menu on the very same day the restaurant expanded its schedule to include Monday nights, resulting in some mistaken conclusions that the menu was only available on Mondays. Not so—the three-course, regularly changing menu is offered (in addition to the regular a la carte menu) Sunday through Thursday for $35, considerably reducing the splurge factor of chef/owner Michael Leviton's cuisine. Caution: If you opt for a glass of each wine suggested to accompany each course, you may bring the splurge factor back into play. But at the end of the evening, you'll be reminded that a beautifully prepared meal, completed by exquisitely chosen wines, can be a great comfort in uncomfortable times. And who can put a price on that? IB

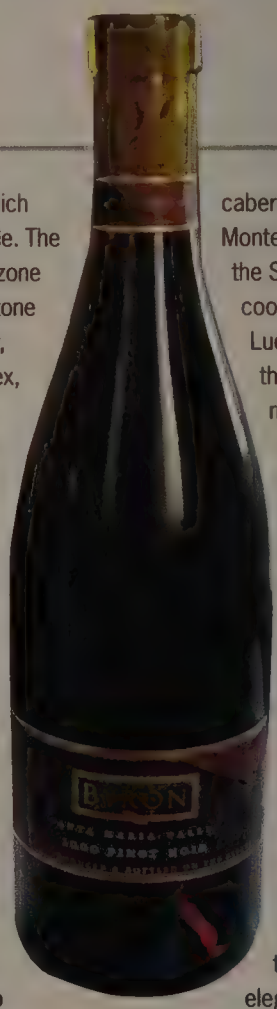
BY SANDY BLOCK MW

Long overshadowed by the prestigious vineyards of Napa and Sonoma Counties, California's vast Central Coast, the region between Los Angeles and San Francisco, is generating tremendous excitement in the wine world. People who follow the money note that virtually every sizable California wine company, and more than a few heavyweights from Australia, have invested massively in the region over the past decade, impressed by the diverse climatic and soil conditions and attracted by the lower costs of vineyard ownership compared with regions further north. A recent trip tasting through the Central Coast convinced me that some of its vineyards are among the finest in the United States. In particular, many of the chardonnays, pinot noirs and syrahs are distinctive enough in style and flavor profile as to inspire a special search.

The labels are not easy to understand. Some will read "Central Coast," which is the largest geographic designation and, as such, permits wineries to blend grapes grown anywhere in the area to make their wine. More specific designations refer to county names, with Monterey, San Luis Obispo and Santa Barbara accounting for the great majority of the region's production. There are also wines originating in particular viticultural areas (called AVAs), which are districts certified as having conditions similar enough within their boundaries to impart unique characteristics. Among the most prominent districts are Santa Cruz Mountains, Arroyo Seco, Paso Robles, Santa Maria Valley and Santa Ynez Valley. Confusingly, some wines that qualify for this more specific designation instead use the county name on the label because it's more familiar to consumers. Finally there are vineyard-designated wines, all the grapes for which are grown on a single contiguous property.

Based on my observations, three factors set the Central Coast apart: the strong value the better wines represent; the climate, which in some zones is significantly more temperate in spring and summer than most of Napa and Sonoma, making it ideal for cool-climate grapes; and the fact that most vines have been planted relatively recently and therefore benefit from current thinking on how to evoke the ripest, most delicious grape flavors. Following is a rundown on some of the most important geographic designations to look for in a store or on a wine list.

Santa Barbara County begins only a hundred miles north of Los Angeles but it is one of California's coolest climatic zones because many of the vineyards are directly exposed to the Pacific Ocean. Acreage has doubled in the last six years with a particular focus on pinot noir, which benefits from a long, slow ripening cycle. The Santa Maria Valley, a windy, fog-swept zone with California's only appreciable limestone soils, is especially prized for its lemony, tropical chardonnays as well as complex, velvety, cherry-scented pinots. The Santa Rita Hills is a new, slightly cooler zone, more exposed to sea influence than Santa Maria, and planted with the highest-quality clones of chardonnay and pinot noir, producing wines that are understated and crisp in style. The county's other major district, the Santa Ynez Valley, is warmer, although summer temperatures rarely exceed 75 degrees. It's a great zone for ample, Burgundian-style chardonnay and, in the higher, mountainous elevations, home to some of the best Rhone-style grapes in all of California, including luscious but firm, raspberry-like syrah.



A bit further north, San Luis Obispo County is considerably warmer, except in the small Edna Valley, which is also a top chardonnay producer. Paso Robles, the largest zone, is sunny, hot, and ideal for peppery jammy zinfandels, Rhone varietals, and lush, flavorful cabernets. Traveling up the coast, Monterey County, which encompasses the Salinas Valley, is predominantly cool and windy. Monterey's Santa Lucia Highlands has become one of the state's most sought-after pinot noir and chardonnay districts, with harvests often extending into November, producing wines with firm acidity and subtle but intense fruit flavors. On the district's higher hillside elevations, the Bordeaux varieties also thrive. The County's Arroyo Seco zone is best known for elegant, supple white wines, particularly chardonnays, which typically incorporate tropical, honeyed elements with the predominant bright green apple fruitiness. Directly south of San Francisco, the Santa Cruz Mountains produce elegant, mostly red wines, including cabernet, merlot and zinfandel, with bright berry flavors, outstanding balance, and often bracing acidity. Its rocky vineyards frequently yield extremely concentrated wines noted for their flavor impact and ageability.

Performing Arts: Making Contact

If you're tired of the endlessly recycled musical (think Showboat or South Pacific), here's a fun alternative. Contact, last year's fresh block buster hit, returns to the Colonial March 4 through 9. Although this show doesn't provide the typical elements of a classic musical (singing librarians, dancing nurses and such), there is a woman in a yellow dress who gives a depressed advertising executive a reason to live. The musical is actually three separate stories lumped together under one title, and critics loved it. The New York Times wrote that director Susan Stroman "created the unthinkable: a new musical throbbing with wit, sex appeal and a perfectionist's polish. Contact restores the pleasure principle to the American musical." On the other hand, we thought the three pieces which take place in three distinct eras, a bit oddly strung together. Apparently they're all about the ability to connect, but each is so wildly different in plot and setting that the connection between the three pieces is faint. But the music is fun—everything from ballet to swing, from Tchaikovsky to Robert Palmer—and the dancing is terrific, which makes Contact worth checking out. The Wang Theatre, 270 Tremont St., Boston (800-447-7400). Tue., Thu. and Fri., 8pm; Sat., 2 and 8pm; Sun., 1 and 7pm. Through March 9. $28-$73.

SAT./MARCH 8

Art: Everything but the Cow

Mobius, the Fort Point artist-run space for all things artistically bizarre, is gearing up for its fifth annual Cattle-Free Art Auction. The event is known for offering up great deals on art auction items—everything from paintings, sculpture, prints and photographs by local artists. But it's also known for its selection of more unusual auction items. This year, you can bid on a faux fight (to be staged at the venue of your choice); membership to a poem of the month club; a vacation at a summer home in the Czech Republic; a private calligraphy tutorial; a Shiatsu massage; and a "damn good pie." If bidding isn't entertaining enough, there's also live music by Two Guys on a Stump and Swamp Gas, performances by members of the Mobius Artists Group and a poetry reading by Charles Coe. A light buffet, cash bar and door prizes all come with it. 354 Congress St., Boston (617-542-7416). 7-10pm. $15, $10 students and seniors.

Music: Book It Tour

The story of Kid Koala's rise to the spotlight is legendary in the turntablist underground. When the renowned DJ duo Coldcut (who also happen to be owners of the now famous Ninja Tune record label) came to play in his hometown, Eric San (aka Kid Koala) arranged to be the guy who picked them up at the airport and gave them a ride to the show. He also happened to have a tape in the car called Scratchhappyland, which just happened to be his own demo. Kid Koala's inventiveness extends beyond his tactics for scheming his way onto a cool record label—you can hear it in Koala's creative take on turntablism as well. Rather than making dance-floor-filling bangers, he relies on rare vinyl gems, like vocal samples and movie soundtracks, setting up scratchy hooks while dropping dialogue snippets over them. His latest venture is a tour that combines two electric pianos, four turntables, a slide projector and his recently released book, Nufonia Must Fall (a graphic novel with accompanying CD soundtrack). With DJs P-Love and Jester in tow, Koala performs songs from the book's "soundtrack" at the Brattle Theatre. 40 Brattle St., Cambridge (617-931-2000). 7 and 10pm, $15.

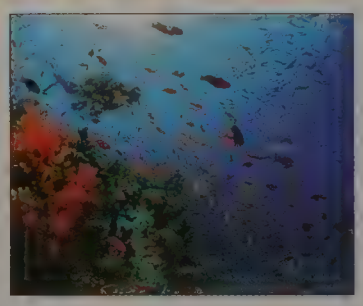
Tastings: Choco-holics Anonymous

One would expect chocolate-chip cookies or brownies at an event called Chocolate Fools Day—but how about chocolate tacos, chocolate bagels or chocolate soup? The 25 chefs and caterers involved in this IMPROPER-sponsored fund-raiser for the Cambridge Performance Project get truly creative, serving up everything from white-chocolate macadamia-nut brownies and chocolate-meringue mushrooms to frozen fudge cake and chocolate espresso tarte, among dozens of other tempting creations. They're competing in categories like "From Soup to Nuts and Chocolate Too," "Baked by Popular Demand" and "The Chocolate, the Whole Chocolate and Nothing but the Chocolate." For us, it all falls under one big category of pure heaven. Hyatt Regency Cambridge, 575 Memorial Drive, Cambridge (617-233-5722). www.cambridgeperformanceproject.org. 12:30-3pm. $25, $30 in advance.

THROUGH SEPTEMBER

Movies: Ships Ahoy!



First the sad news: 10 percent of the world's coral reefs, which were built over thousands of years by tiny animals, have died in the past four years, and nearly half of the remaining reefs are threatened. Now the good news: These stunning coral creations, home to 25 percent of marine life, are the subject of the new Imax film at the Museum of Science. The film, Coral Reef Adventure, explores both the disturbing and inspiring aspects of the underwater landscapes and focuses on the reefs off Fiji, Tahiti and Rangiroa, as well as Australia's Great Barrier Reef. Viewers get to swim with ichthyologist Richard Pyle and marine conservationist Jean-Michel Cousteau (son of Jacques). It's all set to songs by Crosby, Stills and Nash and narrated by Liam Neeson. $8, $7 seniors, $6 children. Science Park, Boston (617-589-0454).

WED./MARCH 12

Comedy: Laughing for a Cause

Zany stand-up comedian Bobcat Goldthwait is the headline act for the first annual Canned Laughter comedy night, a benefit show to raise money for the Greater Boston Food Bank. Best known for his offbeat portrayal of Zed in the Police Academy series and as the mastermind behind the 1992 movie Shakes the Clown, Goldthwait is also the one who pulled the infamous stunt on The Tonight Show with Jay Leno—he doused a chair with lighter fluid and lit it on fire. (He was charged with a misdemeanor and had to pay a $3,888 fine.) Although Canned Laughter won't have burning furniture, it promises to be an entertaining evening nonetheless. Hosted by WZLX 100.7 FM, the Rustic Kitchen and Boston Rocks nightclub, the night also features veteran comics Tony V., Newsradio's Lauren Verge and Paul Gilligan. Don't forget to bring a canned food item. The Comedy Connection, Faneuil Hall Marketplace, Boston (617-427-5200, ext. 5050). VIP pre-show reception, 6:30pm; show, 8:30pm; post-party, 10pm. VIP, $100; show and post-party, $25-$30.

Spanning almost six acres, this is the third largest flower show in the world. If you simply can't wait until March 15 to get your spring fix, you can go to the Gala Preview Party March 14, from 7 to 9:30pm, where you can get a sneak peak of the floral displays, attend a cocktail reception and witness a celebrity challenge in which VIPs attempt to design their own flower arrangements. *Bayside Expo Center (617-933-4980). CityScope: Toast of the Irish

There are few things we look forward to more than heading to one of Harpoon Brewery's seasonal tent parties after work on a Friday night. We have a few beers, mingle with the bubbly crowd of young professionals, get pleasantly buzzed and then walk over to Jimbo's to sober up over a plate of fish and chips. It's a full night out, and we can still be in bed by 10pm. Well, it's that time again. Harpoon's St. Patrick's Day party—held March 7 and 8—allows you to start toasting the patron saint of Ireland 10 days early. Grab a pint of Harpoon's seasonal Hibernian Ale, belt out Irish pub songs with singer Dennis Sullivan and dance a jig to the live tunes of Colum Cille Pipes & Drums. When you're ready to take a break, the Farragut House Restaurant has corned beef and cabbage to help you refuel. 306 Northern Ave., Boston (888-HAR-POON). March 7, 5:30-11pm; March 8, 2-11pm. $10.

CityScope: Ode to the Green Isle

St. Patty's day falls on a Monday this year, but don't fret. There are plenty of ways to get started a wee bit early and make your celebration last a whole weekend. There's the St. Patrick's Day Singles Pub Crawl, sponsored by Seven Minutes.com, which begins with an hour of seven-minute dating at the Burren in Davis Square March 15. Singles can get to know each other better during the pub crawl afterward. The next day, work off your hangover (literally) by putting on your greenest running attire and heading to the Asgard for An Ras Mor, or the Great Race. It's a whopping five-kilometer road race, but there's a party afterward at the Asgard (with free Guinness!) to replenish your fluids. At noon, head to Southie for the annual St. Patrick's Day Parade with 250,000 of your nearest and dearest. See CityScope on page 48 for more information.

LOVE BITES

All the Real Girls avoids romantic cliches

BY PAUL SHERMAN

A third of the movies made are bad ideas that never should have gone before a camera. Another third have intriguing premises but are too lazy to be more than formula films that rehash and regurgitate. The final third are the movies that have an actual shot at being interesting. Lately, it seems that romance is the genre that rarely shows up in that last category. Just ask anyone who sat through Maid in Manhattan, Two Weeks Notice or Just Married. The romantic movie has become the most cliche-ridden genre in Hollywood's arsenal, and that makes David Gordon Green's All the Real Girls all the more refreshing.

This romantic drama set in rural North Carolina is hardly perfect. Its pace is slow, its peripheral action is often unnecessary and its first steps are awkward, since it foists us into the relationship between Paul (Paul Schneider) and Noel (Zooey Deschanel) after they've already begun dating, and before we get any sense of who they are.

This made me initially think All the Real Girls was going to be like Green's first movie, 2000's George Washington, which had an intriguing setting and poetic visual style but was naggingly slow. All the Real Girls shares a small-town industrial setting and an occasional sluggishness with its predecessor. But my déjà vu was wrong. This time the central plot is strong enough to drive the movie.

We never do find out exactly what brought Paul and Noel together (Green apparently filmed scenes that started the story earlier, but decided against using them). Paul's in his early twenties and works as an auto mechanic. Noel's a virginal 18 and has just come home from boarding school. His best friend Tip (Shea Wingham) is her big brother and doesn't like that his buddy, who has a history of seducing women and dumping them, is seeing his sister.

Without the "meet cute" circumstances of most love stories—as when Ben Affleck and Jennifer Garner kicked off the romantic subplot in Daredevil with impromptu martial-arts sparring—the burden of conveying romantic sparks falls to the scenes between the two leads, after their mutual infatuation is at full strength. Typically, All the Real Girls generates its romantic energy by keeping the couple's scenes down-to-earth. They hang out by the local mill or at a motel and talk intimately. Paul's so stuck on Noel he doesn't want to have sex with her yet, saying "I just want to make sure in a million years... we'll still have amazing things to say to each other." Emblematic of the movie's low-key style, the indiscretion that most tests their relationship occurs offscreen.

With its dreamy blend of pastoral beauty and harsh industry, the North Carolina mill town in All the Real Girls—where Paul and Noel fall for each other, hit snags and, in fits and starts, try to pick up the pieces—feels unusually spontaneous for a movie. It feels part of a world where people fall in love and unwittingly hurt each other and nurse broken hearts and try to figure out what to do next.

Noel (Zooey Deschanel) and Paul (Paul Schneider) have a romance in a North Carolina mill town.

Adding to the natural feel is Deschanel, who gives the first breakthrough performance since Maggie Gyllenhaal's in Secretary. It's the biggest compliment to say that in a cast of relatively inexperienced performers, who never seem to be acting and who just seem like plain folks rushed in front of the camera, she fits right in. Noel is just an everyday teen dreamer in Deschanel's hands—impulsive, emotional and often confused. That Deschanel is able to fit in is no surprise, considering the wide range of characters she's played over the past two years or so: the testy big sister in Almost Famous, the friend to nerds in The New Guy, the surly rich girl in Big Trouble and the practical joker coworker of Jennifer Aniston in The Good Girl. If you sat through those movies in a row, you might enjoy her characters and not even realize it was the same actress playing them. Deschanel, Schneider and Green give All the Real Girls a raw emotion that easily outweighs the movie's flaws. iB

All the Real Girls ★★★

Written and directed by David Gordon Green. With Paul Schneider, Zooey Deschanel and Patricia Clarkson. Rated R. Sony Pictures Classics.

About Schmidt ★★★
Alexander Payne's latest doesn't have the satiric stin of his previous Citizen Ruth and Election, but it neve tries to. Instead, it's a quietly disarming story of a 66 year-old Omaha insurance executive (Jack Nicholson who's put out to pasture by his company and who wife suddenly dies, and who discovers something h would have never admitted to himself before: h doesn't like how his life turned out. (At Boston Com mon, Fenway, Harvard Square and suburbs.)

Adaptation ★★★½
Another inspired mindbender from the guys wh made Being John Malkovich. This time, director Spik Jonze and writer Charlie Kaufman have made a movi loosely based on a book, but it's also a movie about try ing to film that book. It follows Kaufman (a terrifi Nicolas Cage) in his desperate struggle to turn Susa Orlean's The Orchid Thief into a screenplay, and come up with the funniest, shrewdest peek into the creativ process in years. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Har vard Square and suburbs.)

Blind Spot: Hitler's Secretary ★★½
When she was in her early 20s, Traudl Junge was one Hitler's secretaries, and she was in his secret bunke until the end. She broke 50 years of silence for these ir terviews and, not surprisingly, she has some fascina ing stories to tell, about what went on and about th guilt she's nursed over her youthful naiveté. But th moviemaking here is so crude, this almost feels lik raw footage rather than something that was shaped structured. The movie is sometimes dull because of i (At Coolidge Corner Theatre.)

Catch Me If You Can ★★★
Run, Leo, run. DiCaprio plays a 1960s teen con man i a Steven Spielberg movie that, refreshingly, tries to b nothing more than brisk entertainment. DiCaprio character turns to cons—bank fraud, impersonatin an airline pilot and a doctor—after suffering the dow ward mobility of his family and the break-up of his pa ents (Christopher Walken, Nathalie Baye). It can see like a shallow version of The Talented Mr. Ripley, but it an intoxicating ride. (At Boston Common, Fenwa and suburbs.)

Chicago ★★★
Life is still a cabaret in this movie based on a later Kan der-Ebb musical. That's the whole premise of th lusty, laugh-filled spoof of the Roaring Twenties, which a singing star (and murderess), a star wannal (and murderess) and a flashy lawyer (and defender murderesses) all fight for the spotlight and the hea lines. Renée Zellweger is the wannabe who discove murder was a great career move, Catherine Zeta Jon is the singer trying to keep her name alive while in ja and a surprisingly amusing Richard Gere is the u scale shyster with all the answers. All three know ju how to manipulate truth, justice and the Americ way through performance. (At Boston Common, Fe way and suburbs.)

City of God ★★★½
The title refers to the Rio de Janeiro slum where the a tion takes place, as God-forsaken a place as you'll ev find. But the movie is as rich as its setting is impove ished. Bold and brutal from start to finish, its dog-e dog world and stylistic energy recall Mean Streets a Amores Perros, as its stories stories criss-cross and bu ble into each other, and as 18-year-old hero Rock (Alexandre Rodrigues) tries to somehow get out of l crime-rocked neighborhood alive. Full of humani ambiguity and belligerence, it's a wonderfully orch trated car crash that you just can't stop watching. (Copley Place and Kendall Square.)

Daredevil ★★
Riddle me this, comic-book moviewatchers. What's t point of meticulously establishing the hows and why a person being blinded by chemicals, gaining superh man powers and becoming a crimefighter, if then all other main characters practically have superpowe too—but without the trial and tribulation? Kinda k most of the drama, doesn't it? That's part of the probl with this Marvel adaptation cut from the same trouble hero cloth as Batman and Spider-Man. That and the sp personality that has the story concentrating on char ter drama one minute, then shoving a generic, vid like sports training montage at us the next. In trying be everything to everybody, the movie ends up bei practically nothing. As the love interest with a f moves of her own, Jennifer Garner steals the sh though. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.

Far from Heaven ★★
Todd Haynes' drama lovingly recreates the glo world of Douglas Sirk, whose brilliant 1950s Tech color melodramas, such as All That Heaven Allo meticulously presented post-war suburbia as a supe cially rich yet emotionally stifled community. Hay attempts to up the ante by surrounding housewife lianne Moore with a husband (Dennis Quaid) no longer able to deny his homosexuality and a potential interracial and class-crossing romance with a sensitive black gardener (Dennis Haysbert). But, save for the overt mention of homosexuality, Sirk's critiques of narrow-mindedness covered all of this ground before. (At Copley Place, Kendall Square and suburbs.)

Gangs of New York ★★
Daniel Day Lewis is the epitome of a charismatic villain in Martin Scorsese's 19th-century story. So why is this epic still just a lot of sound and fury signifying nothing but production design and more production design? Maybe it's the familiar this-time-it's-personal plot with Leonardo DiCaprio as an Irish-American returning to the Lower East Side to wreak vengeance on Lewis, who killed his dad (Liam Neeson). Maybe it's the wasting of Cameron Diaz as the woman each man covets. Maybe it's Scorsese's obsession with minute historical detail, at the expense of conveying what it's all about. (At Copley Place, Kendall Square and suburbs.)

The Last Letter ★★★½
In veteran Cambridge documentary director Frederick Wiseman's first fiction film, French actress Catherine Samie delivers a powerful monologue as a Ukrainian Jewish woman writing to her son and telling him of life under the Nazi occupation. Raw and haunting. (At the Museum of Fine Arts March 6, 7, 9, 13, 15 and 16.)

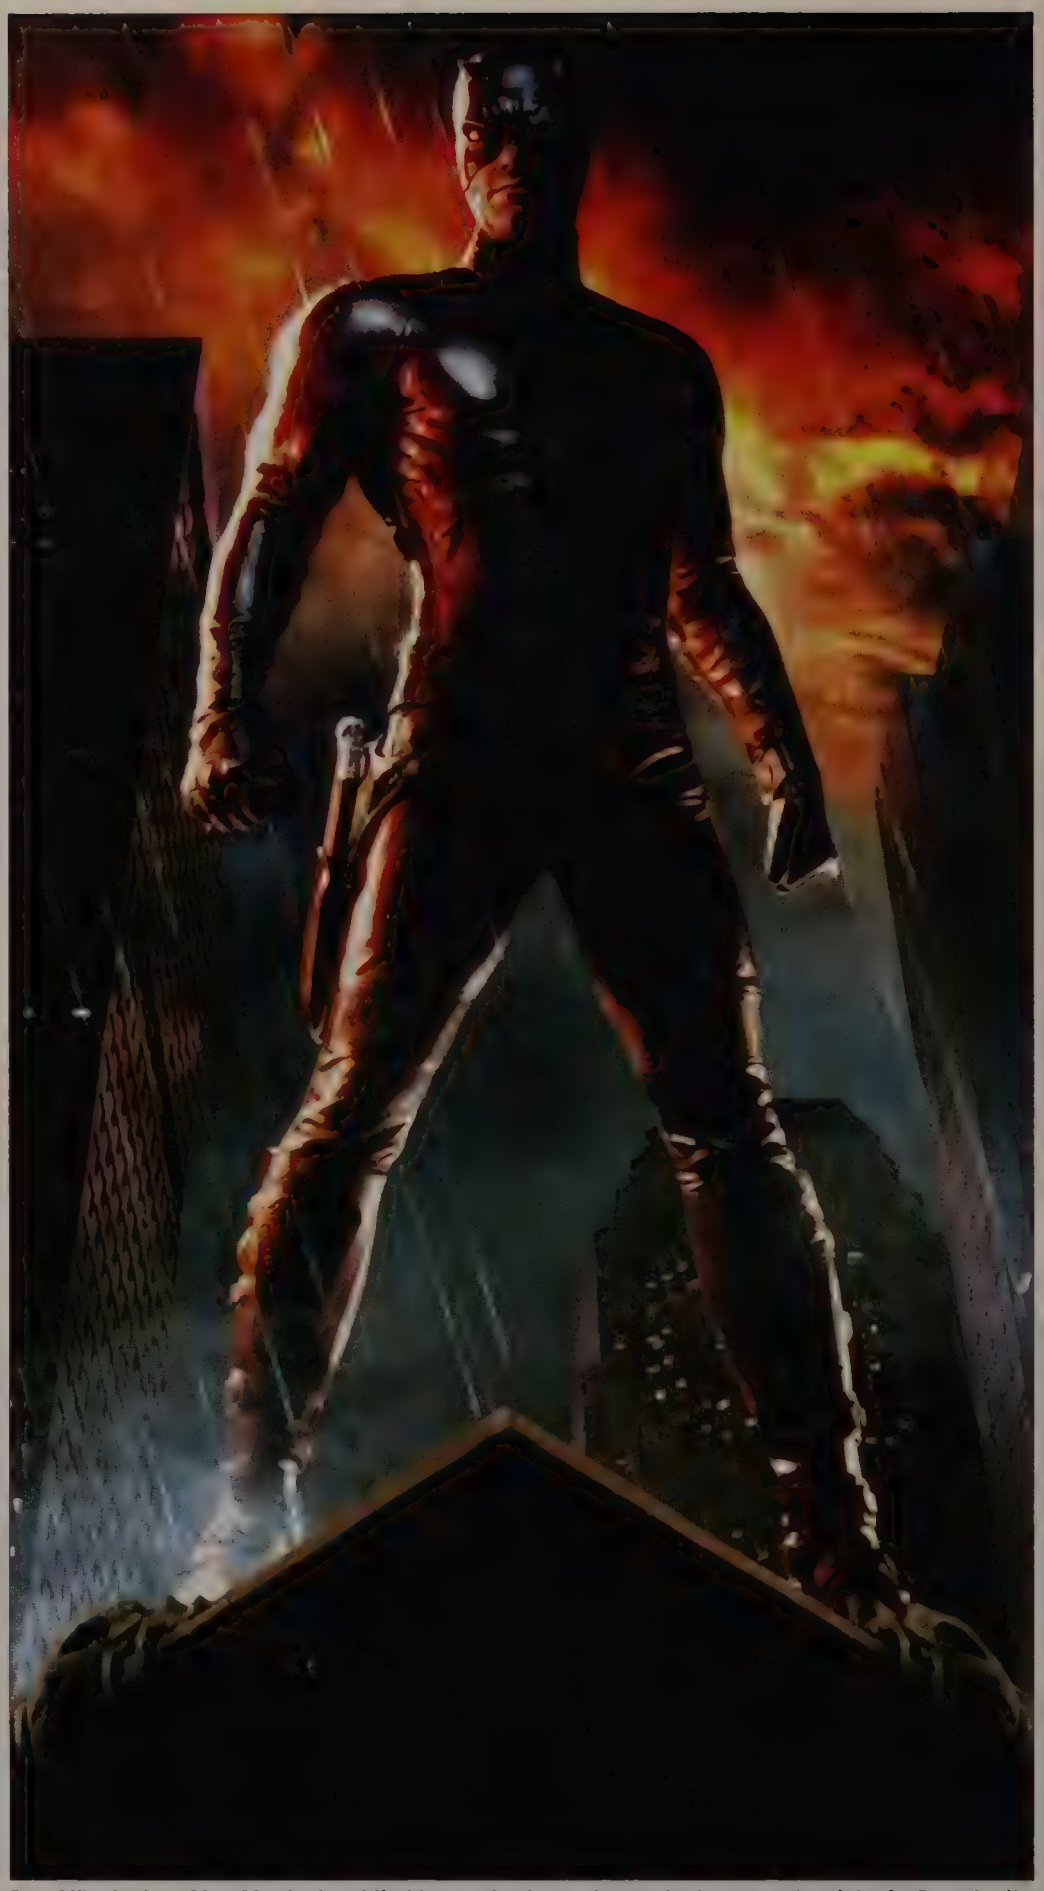
The Life of David Gale ★★
This Texas-set thriller might have been a lot more thrilling with a little less of director Alan Parker's over-the-top treatment. The setup is strong enough to keep the first half involving, with Kate Winslet as an investigative print journalist who's given access to the title character (Kevin Spacey), a former professor and anti-death-penalty activist now on death row for a murder he claims he did not commit. Winslet does well playing an American here, and Spacey does his usual smart-and-smug stuff, but as the movie builds toward its climax it becomes more and more an excuse for Parker's overwrought theatrics. The reactions of Winslet's character become too overemotional for a woman whose hardened objectivity is her main trait (that's the point, but Parker can't pull off her transition), and Parker's maneuvering of the story so that he can stage an opera scene is self-indulgent and just plain silly. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Lord of the Rings: The Two Towers ★½
A whole lot of Dungeons & Dragons mumbo jumbo writ bombastically large. This series has had close to six hours to make me care about anything happening in it, and I still don't care a lick. Frodo can go bury the damn ring in the ground and go for a swim, for all I care. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Max ★★★
Writer-director Menno Meyjes offers bracing speculative drama in his story set in Munich following World War I. The title character is Max Rothman (John Cusack), a fictional Jewish art dealer who's embraced the period's modern art. He befriends another war veteran, an aspiring artist—and, it turns out, emerging fascist—named Adolf Hitler (Noah Taylor). Terrifically acted by the two leads and full of crisp dialogue, the movie engagingly addresses the relationship between creative expression, happiness and politics. It also offers the intriguing theory that Hitler might not have turned to extreme politics had he succeeded at art. (At Kendall Square and Copley Place.)

The Pianist ★★★
It's the little moments in Roman Polanski's Holocaust drama that make it work. Based on the memoirs of late Polish musician and Holocaust survivor Wladyslaw Szpilman, played here by Adrien Brody, the movie powerfully shows the gradual whittling away of Polish Jews' human rights (and humanity) once the Nazis invaded in 1939. It also details how the title character managed to survive while being stripped of rights and crammed into the Warsaw ghetto, seeing his family "deported" to concentration camps, and hiding out for months in apartments the Nazis think are empty. (At Copley Place, Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and suburbs.)

The Quiet American ★★★
The tragic legacy of U.S. "nation-building" abroad comes home powerfully in Philip Noyce's adaptation of Graham Greene's 1950s Vietnam-set thriller. Michael Caine plays the British journalist stationed in Saigon whose relationship to his second home and his young mistress (Do Thi Hai Yen) has a paternalistic sense of entitlement. Along comes Brendan Fraser as the title character, an idealistic U.S. medical aid worker who befriends the journalist and wins away his lover. The American also happens to always be in the right place at the right time, and it's soon clear he's up to more than he says and is at the heart of American meddling in the battle between the French and Vietnamese. Although the movie works better on a historical level than a personal level—it expects us to sympathize with the "impartial" Englishman much more than seems possible—it's a shrewd, outspoken drama. (At Copley Place, Kendall Square, Coolidge Corner and suburbs.)



Ben Affleck plays Matt Murdock, a blind lawyer by day and a masked avenger by night, in Daredevil.

The Recruit ★★
Who knew one man called all the shots at the CIA? That's right. He's dark, a little screwy and looks a whole lot like Al Pacino. But that notion is essential to the premise of this slick, semi-efficient and rather preposterous thriller. Pacino's character recruits MIT software wiz Colin Farrell (whose dead dad may or may not have been a spy). He trains him, plays mind games on Farrell's head like he's knocking on a xylophone and he, and he alone, gives the rookie his first big assignment. Al's even handing out the guns, too, when he tells Farrell to go after fellow rookie Bridget Moynahan. Pacino keeps telling Farrell that "nothing is as it seems," so maybe there's a more convincing script lying somewhere behind the one on-screen. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

The Safety of Objects ★★
Rose (Go Fish) Troche's latest starts like a whiny, Lifetime cable knockoff of American Beauty. Somehow, by the time it's over it's given us a child abduction, a shooting and a mercy killing. But unfortunately, its trip from Point A to Point Z isn't all that thrilling, thanks to its haphazard comedy-drama and its boatload of standard-issue discontented suburbanites. Among them are a lawyer (Dermot Mulroney) who suddenly feels empty when passed over for a partnership, a middle-aged wife and mom (Mary Kay Place) who feels sexually estranged from her husband and a matriarch (Glenn Close) grieving over her long-comatose son (Joshua Jackson). The film wants to show how we let little things like egos and resentments distract our attention from the big things in life, but it's so overwhelmed by the "big things" in its story that it fails to flesh out its relationships. (At Copley Place and Harvard Square.)

Shanghai Knights ★★★
Jackie Chan and Owen Wilson's latest in the Shanghai Noon series is another successor to the Bob Hope and Bing Crosby Road movies. The comedy material i old-school schtick, yet the chemistry between th stars is the real show. This time, the 1880s buddie travel to London to find the sneering aristocrat (Aida Gillen) who killed Chan's father. They're aided by hi high-kicking sister (Fann Wong) as they fight malic in the palace. The movie starts slowly and self-con sciously uses 1960s British Invasion songs for th 1880s London action, but Chan and Wilson's cama raderie and the frenetic martial arts scenes make it a most as much fun as its predecessor. (At Boston Com mon, Fenway and suburbs.)

Spider ★★½
David Cronenberg has made plenty of weird and won derful movies, from Scanners to Naked Lunch. But his la est is only weird and so-so. He dives into the human psy che again in this London-set story of a mental patien (Ralph Fiennes) who reflects on his childhood throug flashbacks in which he's an unseen observer of his dotin mother (Miranda Richardson), pub-crawling fathe (Gabriel Byrne) and his Oedipal 10-year-old se (Bradley Hall). Patrick McGrath's script, based on hi novel, visually likens our memories to jigsaw puzzles o spider webs comprised of countless, joined pieces—bu after getting increasingly involving, the film disap pointingly culminates in a resolution that merely say "crazy is as crazy does." (At Coolidge Corner Theatre)

The Saw Doctors appease American fans with a set of old favorites and a St. Patrick's Day swing

BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

In Ireland, a saw doctor is someone who makes, sharpens and repairs saws. But the Galway-based band the Saw Doctors had a different cut in mind when it came to choosing a name.

"One of our friends worked in the sawmill, sweeping up the sawdust, but he used to tell everybody he was a saw doctor to dignify his position," says singer-guitarist Davy Carton. "For our first gig, we were asked to come up with a name 'cause they were putting an ad in the paper. And as a bit of fun on our friend, we said, 'We're the Saw Doctors,' never realizing that 16 years later, we'd have to explain a local joke."

Local jokes abound on the Saw Doctors' new CD, Play It Again Sham! Digging back to their early Irish records, it's a compilation of songs—including the live favorites "Bless Me Father," "World of Good" and "Me Heart is Livin' in the Sixties Still"—that were never released in this country.

"This disc is a response to requests from people in America to hear certain songs," Carton says in reference to the Saw Doctors' fervent Stateside following, which is sure to turn out for a 14-stop tour that hits the Roxy March 16 and concludes at Northampton's Calvin Theatre on St. Patrick's Day.

"We thought we were just putting out something to fill a bit of a vacuum," says Carton, whose group is between new studio releases. "But in some ways, we've gotten a better response to this [CD] than to Villains?, which we thought was a more serious album and something we spent a lot of time on."

A polished experiment with programming and horns, the 2001 disc Villains? may have confused fans, especially coming on the heels of the folk-rooted 1998 CD Songs from Sun Street. But Carton sees Play It Again Sham! as a good introduction to the group.

"It's got the lively side of the Saw Doctors, the fun side, and you can't go wrong with it," he says by phone from his Galway home. "There are 20 tracks on it. You'll definitely like 10 of them!"

Carton's devil-may-care openness reflects the 1987 birth of the Saw Doctors in the small Galway County town of Tuam. He hooked up with guitarist Leo Moran, who played with an Irish reggae band called Too Much for the White Man and had retained a fondness for Blaze X, a short-lived late-'70s punk band that Carton had fronted. The two found common ground as songwriters.

"Tuam is that kind of place," says Carton, 42. "It's got a history of being a great musical town. There were always brass bands and showbands in the '50s and '60s. Mike Scott of the Waterboys saw us in a bar in Galway and out of the blue said, 'Why don't you support us in Ireland?'" After six weeks, Scott extended the invitation to England. Carton quit his job as a welder and jumped in the van.

The group's Scott-produced 1989 debut single, "N17," paved the way for the anthemic "I Useta Lover," which became Ireland's biggest-selling single of all time, even topping U2.

"We're very rooted," Carton says. "We write from our own experiences and draw from local characters and experiences here in Galway. Hopefully we write well enough that what we're trying to say will translate. So far, so good."

Indeed, the Saw Doctors have struck a crowd-pleasing balance between non-trendy rock, punk, country and Irish traditional music. "We're an old-fashioned rock band in that melody is in the forefront," Carton says. "Leo summed it up very well, that we stole bits of every kind and put it in a stew. At its core, we're singer-songwriters."

"It's a feature of Saw Doctors concerts that people like to sing the words," says Carton, whose band will be joined this tour by co-founding Waterboys member Anthony Thistlethwaite in place of bassist Pearse Doherty, who retired in December. "We're high-energy. We like to rustle up the crowd, and we like to engage. The showbands used to have a phrase, 'Send 'em home sweating,' and we fully subscribe to that view."

There should be plenty of sweating around St. Patrick's Day, a time when the Saw Doctors regularly appear in these parts.

"It's not something the band set out to do," says Carton, who expects to return for a June package tour with Billy Bragg, Black 47 and Great Big Sea. "We could play Boston in May, but we get twice as much money in March. Our agent gets offers for the 10 days leading up to St. Patrick's Day in various markets along the East Coast and as far as Chicago. And to be honest, it's very hard to turn down." iB

Secrets to Planning the Perfect Wedding

Your wedding.
Talk about a life-altering experience!

Few events are more expensive or have a bigger impact. And it's not just about you. Everyone around you is affected - from family to friends to co-workers. It's your past and your future coming together on a single day. Years from now, you'll still be looking at the pictures. Let's hope all goes well. Here's a way to make sure it does.

Come to the Secrets to Planning the Perfect Wedding half-day seminars. It's your chance to get Boston's top wedding experts to answer your questions on everything.

This is not just another bridal show. It's a series of mini-workshops conducted by professionals on every aspect of wedding planning: from cakes to calligraphy, image to invitations, music to manners. It's all here in one place on one day. Specialists in specific subject areas such as food or flowers will lead each workshop and end with a question and answer session. Then it's your chance to compare notes and trade secrets with other brides! Before and after the seminars, participants can mingle informally with each other and with the wedding experts in the beautiful Hotel at MIT ballroom, while enjoying champagne, hors d'oeuvres and wedding cake.

Röyksopp puts a new twist on a newly hip genre

If you've seen any of the well-known progressive house DJs who've played in Boston over the past year, you've probably encountered a remixed Röyksopp song or two. Perhaps you heard James Zabiela's "Ingenborg" remix of "Remind Me," with its delicately repeated vocal snippet "what I was missing all that time in England," or maybe it was Silicone Soul's dark and haunting "Hypno House Dub" of "Poor Leno" that you couldn't get out of your head. Despite all the attention that the recent Röyksopp remixes have earned in the dance music world, every song on their debut album, Melody A.M., stands perfectly well on its own without any remix embellishment.

Röyksopp, hailing from Tromso, Norway, makes a stop at the Paradise March 16.
